West. Rail. through Crewe to Hartford station, thence 3 miles: from Derby, through Crewe, &c., 72 miles.—Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7 a.m.: post closes 8½ p.m.—The town, which derives its name from its connection with those wiches or salt-works, which, in the time of the Conqueror, were included in the earldom of Chester, is pleasantly situated on the banks of the river Weever, near its confluence with the Dane. The streets are generally irregular, and most of the houses are of considerable antiquity. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the manufacture of salt, and there are large dockyards here for the construction of the flats, as they are called, or boats, used for the conveyance of that article to other places. It is generally supposed that the salt springs at Northwich were known to the ancient Britons long before the Christian era, for they called this place the "Black Salt Town;" and it possesses the largest salt-works and the most extensive mines of salt in the kingdom, there being upwards of thirty establishments, including those engaged upon the produce of the brine springs and salt-works. The springs seem to be inexhaustible, and the mines are extensive enough to last for centuries. The Independents and Wesleyan Methodists have places of worship here. The Northwich poor-law union comprises 60 parishes, with a population of about 27,000 persons, spread over an area of 83 square miles. In former times it was a place of considerable commercial importance, but the tide of traffic has long been diverted into other channels. The church is a noble Gothic edifice, with an embattled tower at the west end, and contains numerous very interesting sepulchral brasses. The free grammar-school was refounded in the time of Edward I., and its endowment of £60 a year from the Crown was increased, in 1763, by a bequest of £300 a year from Mrs. Frances Barnes. The Wesleyan Methodists, Baptists, and Society of Friends, have places of worship here. Chipping-Norton was first incorporated by James I. in 1607; under the late municipal act it is governed by four aldermen and twelve councillors, under the usual corporate style; their public income is about £400 a year. The commissioners have built a workhouse here, capable of accommodating 350 inmates. Chipping-Norton poor-law union comprises 33 parishes, with a population of about 15,500 persons, spread over an area of 117 square miles. NORWICH, the capital of Norfolk, the largest town on the eastern side of England: 114 miles from London (coach road 108), 24 from Yarmouth.

— East. Co^a Rail. to Norwich station: from Derby, through Syston and Peterborough to Norwich, &c., 166 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7 a.m. and 5½ p.m.: post closes 9½ p.m. and 5.55 a.m. — Norwich appears to have gradually risen out of the decay of Venta Icenorum, or Caistor, and would seem, at its early period, to have stood close upon the coast, and by degrees grown into a fishing town of some importance, to such an extent, indeed, that in the time of Edward the Confessor it had 1,320 burgesses, and 25 churches. In the time of the Conqueror, although the town had suffered previously from the siege which he laid to it, and from the contributions which he had levied, the number of churches had increased to 54, showing the great increase in the population and importance of the place. In 1122, Henry I. kept his Christmas in the town, and endowed it with a franchise equal to that of London. About that time the Jews settled in Norwich, but shortly afterwards became embroiled with the monks; and a story getting into circulation that they had crucified a Christian boy, the feelings of the inhabitants were aroused, a horrid massacre ensued, and the Jews were almost exterminated. About 1336, a large number of worsted and woollen manufacturers from Holland settled here, and caused a great increase in the business, wealth, and population of the city, laying, indeed, the foundation of its present magnitude and value to the country. Norwich is chiefly bounded by the river Wensum, by which its form is principally shaped, being that of a cornucopia, or bent cone, and it has not inaptly been compared to the figure of a shoulder of venison. A strong flint embattled wall, flanked with forty towers, and pierced by twelve beautiful gates, formerly surrounded the dwellings, some of the ruins of which still remain. Most of the old parts of the town are irregular, and the streets narrow and winding; but the new portions are elegant, and very pleasing in appearance, while the suburbs are adorned with numerous handsome villas, surrounded by pleasing pleasure-grounds. The market-place, which is a large square, is one of the most spacious in the kingdom, and being overhung by the massive tower of the church of St. Peter Mancroft, and girdled by houses of antique construction, with their gable ends to the front, forms a beautiful subject for the painter. The Cathedral of Norwich, founded in 1096 by Herbert de Lozinga, did not attain completion until about the year 1430, but the edifice has been materially altered since that time. In 1806–7, the whole fabric was completely repaired and renovated. The length of the whole building from east to west is 407 feet, the breadth of the transept 178 feet; cloisters are attached to the south side of the nave, enclosing a quadrangle. Though not comparable to many others in the richness of its architectural details, the west front of this cathedral is elaborately worked, and affluent in its effect. In its vicinity are the prebendal houses, and the remains of a priory, founded by Lozinga, for sixty Benedictine monks, who were designed to serve the cathedral, but who, by their haughty and oppressive conduct, frequently became embroiled with the citizens, and drew upon this splendid edifice attacks which greatly marred its original beauty. The revenues of these monks at the dissolution amounted to £1,050; but the prior and monks being converted into a dean and prebendaries, these revenues, after having been seized by the Crown, were restored to them. According to Bishop Tanner and other authorities, in addition to this Benedictine priory, there were no less than eighteen monastic institutions in the city, which now contains eight wards, with the following parishes:—St. Peter Southgate, a discharged rectory, rated at £2. 17s. 3½d., returned at £54; gross income, £62; patron, the Bishop of Norwich.—St. Ethelred, a perpetual curacy, returned at £55; gross income, £77; patrons, Norwich Charity Trustees.—All Saints, a discharged rectory, rated at £3. 14s. 7d., and united to that of St. Julian; certified at £19. 13s., returned together at £120; gross income, £246; patron, in 1835, the Rev. Townsend.—St. Augustine, a rectory, rated at £6. 17s. 8½d., returned at £100; gross income, £89; patrons, the Dean and Chapter of Norwich.—St. George Colgate, a rectory, certified at £10, returned at £130; gross income, £98; patrons, the Dean and Chapter of Norwich.—St. Clement, a discharged rectory, rated at £7. 9s. 2d., returned at £120; gross income, £98; patron, Caius College, Cambridge.—St. Edmund, a rectory, rated at £4. 6s. 3d., returned at £110; gross income, £165; patron, in 1835, the Rev. C. D. Brereton.—St. Saviour, a perpetual curacy, certified at £3, returned at £100; gross income, £103; patrons, the Dean and Chapter of Norwich.—St. Paul, St. James, and Poethorpe, a rectory and curacy, returned at £87; gross income, £164; patrons, the Dean and Chapter of Norwich. All these livings are in the archdeaconry and diocese of Norwich. In so large a city as this, the places of worship for the Dissenters of every denomination, and the educational institutions, are of course numerous, many of the latter being partly supported by endowment. The Hospital and School for the Blind, which is open to all England, is an admirably conducted institution. It was founded in 1805, in the first instance, through a donation of £1,000 from Mr. Thomas Tawell, a blind gentleman. St. Giles' Hospital, formerly a monastic institution, is the most important charity in the city; it contains eleven wards, has 85 men, and 81 women, beside ten nurses, on the foundation, and is endowed with property which produces upwards of £7,000 a year. Doughty's Hospital, which contains 38 tenements, was first founded through the bequest, in 1687, of £6,000, by the gentleman whose name it bears; it now enjoys an income of about £1,800 per annum. The County Hospital is also another extensive and highly valuable institution, well supported, and eminently beneficial. There are a number of other excellent charitable institutions, many of which are well endowed; and altogether Norwich derives a benefit from benefactions little short of £20,000 a year. On the shoulder of the hill of Norwich, south-east of the ancient town, stands Norwich Castle, which, from its extent, appearance, and associations, is alike interesting. Uffa, the founder of the East Anglian monarchy, is supposed to have founded here a strong intrenchment about the year 575, called North-wic, or the "northern station," in consequence of its lying northward of the great central Roman fort called Venta Icenorum, and from that fortress the city has derived its name. Something more than half a century afterwards, a strong castle was erected on the site of the encampment, which was thoroughly renovated, and most probably rebuilt, except the exterior works, by Canute the Great. Mr. Wilkins calls it the best example of Saxon castellated architecture in the kingdom. Near the castle, on the same height, are the County Jail, erected in 1828, at an outlay of £50,000; and the New County Hall, a handsome edifice in the Tudor style of architecture, cased with cement to look like stone. The Guildhall, situated at the north end of the market-place, is an ancient edifice, built early in the 15th century, and of very interesting appearance; it is used as the hall for the county and city, being arranged for the public business of both districts. St. Andrew's Hall, which formerly was the nave of the conventual church of the monastery of Black friars, is now used as the place for the festal assemblages of the corporation, and for the great public meetings which are occasionally held by religious or other societies. It was originally built by Sir Robert Erpingham and his son, about the same time as the Guildhall was constructed, but was given to the city by Henry VIII. Norwich is the most ancient manufacturing town in England, having been settled as such in the time of Henry I. by a colony of Flemings, who got their long wool spun at a village about nine miles to the northward, called Worsted, whence the name of that article, and it is now the great mart for crapes, bombazines, horse-hair cloth, and other similar fabrics. Norwich was anciently a seaport, but was divested of that character for several centuries by changes in the bed of the river Yare, until it again resumed its position by the formation of a ship canal, through which it communicates with Yarmouth. Assizes are held here twice a year, and sessions as often as the recorder thinks necessary. Norwich claims to be a borough by prescription, but it has received several charters, and under the new municipal act it is divided into eight wards, governed by sixteen aldermen and forty-eight common councillors. The city returns two members to parliament. — Contains 5,920 acres: 14,680 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 62,344: ass^d. prop^r. £70,503: poor rates in 1838, £16,595. 11s. — Market days: Wednesday and Saturday. Fairs: Thursday before Easter-Monday, and Oct. 17. — Bankers: Gurney & Co.—draw on Barclay, Bevan, & Co.; Harvey & Hudson (Crown Bank)—draw on Hankey & Co.; Robert Balls (Deposit Bank)—draw on Masterman, Peters, & Co.; Branch of Bank of England—draw on the Bank of England; East of England Bank—draw on London and Westminster Bank. — Inns: Bell, Star, Norfolk, Royal, and Swan.

NORWOOD, MIDDLESEX, a precinct and parochial chapelry in Elthorne hun^d, intersected by the Grand Junction Canal: 10 miles from London, 2 from Hounslow, 7 from Uxbridge. — Gt. West. Rail. to Southall, thence 1 mile: from Derby, through London, &c., 142 miles. — London letters deliv^d three times each way daily. — A series of large brick buildings, pleasantly situated on an eminence, has been appropriated as a school of industry for destitute children from the London parishes. — The living is a perpetual curacy in the diocese of London: pres. net income, £128: patron, Rector of Hayes: pres. incumbent, E. J. Smith, 1838: contains 212 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 2,385: probable popⁿ in 1849, 2,743: ass^d prop^r. £7,892: poor rates in 1848, £735. 8s.

NORWOOD (UPPER AND LOWER), SURREY, a hamlet, including two villages, which form separate districts, extending from 5 to 8 miles, in the parishes of Lambeth and Croydon—(which see for access, &c.): 6 miles from London, 4 from Tooting.

— London letters deliv^d five times each way daily. — St. Luke's, Lambeth, is a district church in the Grecian style of architecture, with a tower and spire, and Corinthian portico, erected, in 1825, at an expense of £17,500. The Independents, Baptists, and Wesleyans, have each a place of worship here. There is a house of industry for Lambeth parish for 472 pauper children. The South Metropolitan Cemetery, formed on the gentle slope of a hill, is a pleasingly arranged burial-ground; it was opened in 1836. It contains two chapels—one for Episcopalians, and the other for Dissenters. Norwood was long celebrated as a rendezvous for gipsies. The Royal Beulah Spa is a spring discovered in 1827, and held in some estimation; the water consists chiefly of sulphate and hydrochlorate of magnesia. The grounds around it were laid out under the instructions of Mr. Decimus Burton, and are beautiful in the extreme. Indeed, the whole of the district, of which Norwood is the centre, is remarkable for its picturesque scenery and fine views of the metropolis and surrounding country. The villas of the resident gentry are numerous, and some of the grounds by which they are surrounded exceedingly pleasing. — The living (St. Luke's) is a perpetual curacy in the diocese of Winchester: pres. net income, £303: patron, Archbishop of Canterbury: pres. incumbent, Charles Turner, 1836: popⁿ in 1841, 2,500.

NORWOOD. See CLIFTON WITH NORWOOD.

NOSLEY (or GNOUSALE), LEICESTER, an extra-parochial district in Gartree hun^d, watered by a branch of the Welland: 91 miles from London, 8 from Market-Harborough, 11 from Leicester. — (For access, &c., see MARKET-HARBOROUGH.) — The church, which stands near the Hall, is large and of ancient erection. — Contains 880 acres: 1 house: popⁿ in 1841, 20. — The Hall, a fine old mansion, which contains a fine collection of paintings, has been in the possession of the family of its owner for several centuries. It is the seat of Sir Arthur Grey Hazlerigg, Bart., who traces his descent from Roger de Hezlerigge, one of the knights in the invading army of William the Conqueror, and whose descendant, Sir Arthur, was an active parliamentary leader during the civil war, being governor of Newcastle, besides doing active and efficient service in the field, his father having been created a baronet in 1622. The present proprietor of Nosley succeeded to the title and estates, as twelfth baronet, in 1812, on the death of his father.

NOSTAL AND HURSTWICK, WEST RIDING, YORK, a township in Wragby parish—(which see for access, &c.): 177 miles from London, 5 from Pontefract, 6 from Wakefield. — Money orders issued at Pontefract: London letters deliv^d 9 a.m.: post closes 5 p.m. — Contains 25 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 152: poor rates in 1848, £201. 10s.

NOTLEY (or NUTLEY), BUCKINGHAM, in Crendon parish.

NOTLEY (BLACK), ESSEX, a parish in Witham hun^d, union of Braintree, west of the river Brain: 47 miles from London (coach road 39), 2 from Braintree, 10 from Chelmsford.—East. Co^r Rail. through Witham to Braintree, thence 2 miles: from Derby, through London, &c., 179 miles.—Money orders issued at Braintree: London letters deliv^d 7½ a.m.: post closes 7 p.m.—Many antiquities have been found in the parish; and it is celebrated as the birth-place of Bishop Bedell, who was born in 1670, and the great naturalist, John Ray, who was born in 1621. The latter was the son of a blacksmith in the village, and is buried in the churchyard.—The living (St. Peter and St. Paul), a rectory in the diocese of Rochester, is valued at £15: pres. net income, £46: patron, St. John's College, Cambridge: pres. incumbent, E. Nottidge: contains 2,370 acres: 103 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 520: ass^d prop^r £2,526: poor rates in 1848, £365. 7s.

NOTLEY (WHITE), ESSEX, a parish in the hun^d of Witham, union of Braintree, on the western bank of the river Brain: 38 miles from London, 4 from Witham, 4 from Braintree.—(For access, &c., see above.)—Money orders issued at Witham: London letters deliv^d 8 a.m.: post closes 5 p.m.—The living, a vicarage in the diocese of Rochester, is valued at £10: pres. net income, £195: patron, Bishop of London: pres. incumbent, G. P. Bennett, 1850: contains 2,020 acres: 85 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 470: ass^d prop^r £2,723: poor rates in 1848, £347. 9s. Tithes commuted in 1839.—Notley Hall is the seat of Edward Frederick Brewster, Esq.

NOTTINGHAM, a borough, county, and union of itself, in the hun^d of Broxtow: 130 miles from London (coach road 124), 16 from Derby.—Nor. West. Rail. through Rugby to Nottingham station: from Derby, 16 miles.—Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7 a.m. and 4½ p.m.: post closes 8½ p.m.—The early history of Nottingham is involved in great obscurity. From the ancient name Snottinga, meaning caves, and ham, a dwelling, the caves hollowed out of the rock on which the castle stands, are supposed to have been storehouses or dwellings used by the aboriginal inhabitants of the island. William the Conqueror built a castle here, the government of which he bestowed upon William Peverel, his natural son. During the long contest between the barons and the two monarchs, John and Henry III., Nottingham was constantly the scene of civil broils; and after the deposition of Edward II., became the residence of his queen, Isabella of France, and her paramour, Roger de Mortimer, Earl of March, and here they were arrested by the order of Edward III. Several parliaments were held here; and, in 1485, it was here that Richard III. concentrated his forces, before he marched to the battle of Bosworth Field. At the commencement of the civil war, Charles I. set up his standard at Nottingham, but the town soon fell into the hands of the parliamentarians, and remained so, under the government of the celebrated Colonel Hutchinson, during the rest of the contest. During the protectorate the castle was dismantled; and, after the restoration of royalty, a new one was built by the Duke of Newcastle. This edifice, which rather resembled a magnificent villa than a castle, was burnt down in the course of a violent riot in 1831. Nottingham is pleasantly situated on the rising ground of the valley of the river Trent. On the north side of it there stretches a series of wood-crowned heights, while the luxuriant and highly cultivated vale of Belvoir spreads out towards Grantham on the south. In the more ancient parts of the town the streets are narrow and irregular, several of them rising in terraces, one above the other, on the side of the height. The spacious market-place, one of the finest, if not the very best, in the kingdom, is surrounded by excellent houses and elegant shops. The new exchange, which occupies the eastern angle, is a fine structure, and contains an admirable suite of rooms for the transaction of all kinds of public business. The county hall, erected in 1770, is also a fine building, and is well planned for the purpose for which it is used. Bishop Tanner, in speaking of the ancient monastic establishments of Nottingham, says—In a place called Broadmarsh, in the west part of the town, not far from the castle, was the house of Greyfriars, said to have been founded by King Henry III. A. D. 1250, which was granted in the 2d year of Edward VI. to Thomas Henneage. The house of the Whitefriars was situated between Moothall-gate and St. James's-lane, in the parish of St. Nicholas, and was reputed to have been founded by Reginald, Lord Grey of Wilton, and Sir John Shirley, Knt., about A. D. 1276. From Archbishop Grenfeld's Register, it appears that an altar to the Virgin Mary was erected in the church of this friary in 1308. Roger Capp was the last prior. He, with six brethren, surrendered it to the king, Feb. 5th, 1539. The site of this priory was granted in the 33d year of Henry VIII. to James Shirley, or Strelley. In the parish of Lenton, a house of Carmelite friars is mentioned on the patent roll of 2d Edward I. There were also a college, or free-chapel, in Nottingham Castle, and a cell of two monks in the chapel of St. Mary-on-the-Rock, under the castle. The present ecclesiastical government of the town comprehends the parishes of St. Mary, St. Nicholas, and St. Peter. The borough has been enlarged by the addition of the neighbouring parish of Sneinton, and parts of those of Lenton and Radford, with the extra-parochial district of the Park and Castle liberties. The livings, which were formerly in the diocese of York, have been transferred to that of Lincoln. St. Mary's is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of St. Paul, rated at £20. 5s. 8d.; gross income, £755; patron in 1841, Earl Manvers. The church of St. Mary is a massive pile, erected about the time of Henry VII. The interior has recently been altered and enlarged, so as to afford accommodation for 2,000 persons; being an increase of 600 above the number who could formerly worship within its walls. St. Paul's chapel is a modern Grecian building, with a Doric portico.—St. Nicholas' is a discharged rectory, rated at £2. 16s. 8d.; gross income, £220; patron, Lord Chancellor. The church is a plain brick edifice, rebuilt in 1678.—St. Peter's is a discharged rectory, rated at £8. 7s. 6d.; gross income, £348; patron, Lord Chancellor. The church is an ancient structure, originally of perpendicular architecture, but greatly modernized: the tower, at the western end, is surmounted by a lofty spire.—St. James' is a perpetual curacy; gross income, £200; patron, Lord Chancellor. The chapel is a neat modern building of perpendicular architecture, with an embattled tower. An elegant new church has recently been erected in the town.—The living of Sneinton is a perpetual curacy; gross income, £243; patron, in 1841, Earl Manvers. The church stands on the summit of an excavated rock, and commands an extensive view. A new church was lately opened in this populous parish, towards the erection of which a grant was obtained from the ecclesiastical commissioners.—The living of Lenton—(which see)—is a discharged vicarage, rated at £9. 2s. 5½d., returned at £100; gross income, £140; patron, Lord Chancellor. A new church has been built here, towards which Mr. Wright of Lenton Hall gave £2,000, besides the site, valued at £800; and the Misses Wright, £500.—Radford is a discharged vicarage, rated at £3. 9s. 4½d.; gross income, £296; patron, Lord Chancellor.—In speaking of so affluent and extensive a place as Nottingham, it is needless to say that every section of the Dissenters has its one or more places of worship. The charitable institutions are equally numerous, and alike beyond our power to enumerate; and it may suffice, therefore, to say, that their funds produce in the aggregate several thousands a year. The free grammar-school was founded in 1513 by Mrs. Agnes Mellors, and is endowed with £772 per annum; there are now usually about fifty boys on the foundation. The lunatic asylum, situated to the east of the town, is a pleasing structure, and its business is admirably conducted. The principal manufactures carried on in Nottingham are those of cotton and silk hosiery, of which it is the capital seat, and some of the fabrics produced are of very singularly beautiful texture. The town has been a borough ever since before the period of historical record; under the new municipal act, it is divided into seven wards, which are governed by fourteen aldermen, and forty-two common councillors; their public income is about £15,000 a year. Ever since the time of Edward I., Nottingham has returned two members to parliament.—Contains 10,942 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 53,091: poor rates in 1848, £21,070. 13s.—Market days, Wednesday and Saturday. Fairs: Friday after Jan. 13, March 7 and 8, Thursday before Easter, and May 7, cattle; Oct. 2, 3, and 4.—Bankers: Moore and Robinson, Notts Banking Company—draw on Glyn, Hallifax, & Co.; Samuel Smith & Co.—draw on Smith, Payne, & Co.; J. & J. Charles Wright & Co.—draw on Roberts, Curtis, & Co.; Hart, Fellows, & Co.—draw on Hanbury, Taylor, & Co.; Nottingham and Notts Banking Company—draw on London and Westminster Bank.—Inns: Flying Horse, Ram, George IV., and Poultry.

NOTTINGTON, DORSET, a hamlet in the parish of Broadway—(which see for access, &c.): 128 miles from London, 8 from Dorchester, 9 from Beaminster.—The village has become celebrated from a spa spring which has been discovered here; and there are now hot, cold, and vapour baths, with a pump-room, for the use of visitors, 30 feet in length.

NUNEATON, WARWICK, a parish and market town in Atherstone division of Hemlingford hund^d, union of Nuneaton, in the line of the Coventry Canal: the parish includes the hamlets of Attleborough and Stockingford: 96 miles from London (coach road 100), 9 from Coventry.—Nor. West. Rail. through Rugby to Nuneaton station: from Derby, through Tamworth to Nuneaton, &c., 38 miles.—Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7 a.m. and 1½ p.m.: post closes 8½ p.m. and 10 a.m.—The town, which is pleasantly situated on the river Anker, is well built, and highly respectable in appearance. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the manufacture of ribbons, the business of which was formerly carried on here very extensively. A priory was founded at Nuneaton in the reign of Henry II., by Robert, Earl of Leicester, for nuns of the order of Fontevrault in Poitiers; its revenues at the dissolution amounted to £290. 15s. A new church, with a tower and spire, was erected here in 1841. The free grammar-school, which has an income of about £300 a year, was founded in the reign of Edward VI. by letters patent; the scholars are ranged in two divisions, those in the upper department receiving a classical education, while those in the lower one are only instructed for the ordinary business of commercial life, but several of the boys are apprenticed from time to time, receiving premiums as rewards for good conduct. Beside this, an English free school was founded here in 1712, by Richard Smith, Esq.; it has now an income of about £195 a year. The charities produce about £54 a year. The Nuneaton poor-law union comprises seven parishes, with a population of about 13,000 persons, spread over an area of 33 square miles. The living (St. Nicholas), a vicarage in the diocese of Worcester, is valued at £24. 14s. 7d.: pres. net income, £902: patron, the Crown: pres. incumbent, R. C. OAKHAM, RUTLAND, a market town, the capital of the county: it consists of two divisions or manors, called Oakham-Deanshold with Barleythorpe, and Oakham-Lordshold with Leighfield: 102 miles from London (coach road 95), 6 from Uppingham. — Gt. Nor. Rail. through Peterborough to Oakham station: from Derby, through Syston, &c., 56 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 8 a.m.: post closes 6 p.m. — The town, which is highly respectable in appearance, is situated in the fertile vale of Catmose, and, by means of a canal which joins the Melton-Mowbray navigation, enjoys a considerable trade. The assizes for the county, and the quarter sessions, are held in the Shire-hall, an ancient building, which is supposed to have formed part of a castle erected in the time of William the Conqueror. The lord of the manor and castle of Oakham still claims, by prescriptive right, a franchise of a peculiar character. It is that of taking a shoe from the horse of a peer of the realm the first time he rides through the lordship, unless it be redeemed by the payment of a fine; several of the shoes thus received are now nailed to the gates of the castle and inside the hall, labelled with the names of the noblemen from whom they have been taken. Among them is one given by Queen Elizabeth, a splendid one given by the late Duke of York, another by King George IV., and one by her present Majesty the Queen. The Independents, Baptists, Wesleyan Methodists, and Society of Friends, all have places of worship here. The free grammar-school was founded in the reign of Elizabeth, by Robert Johnson, Archdeacon of Leicester: it has eight exhibitions of £40 a year each, tenable for seven years, at either Oxford or Cambridge, besides several scholarships. Attached to the school there is an hospital, the buildings of which are occupied by the master and boarders, but the pensioners live at their own dwellings, each of them receiving £10 per annum. The whole income of the institution is about £1,500 a year. The hospital of St. John and St. Anne, originally founded in the reign of Richard II. by Walter Dalby, was refounded in the reign of Elizabeth by Archdeacon Johnson, who greatly augmented the endowment. There are twenty poor people on this charity, each of whom receives £6. 10s. per annum. The other benefactions produce about £70 a year. The county jail, a large structure, with a Doric entrance, stands close to the town; it was built at a cost of £10,000. Oakham is the place for the election of the county members. The Oakham poor-law union comprises thirty parishes, with a population of about 10,000, spread over an area of 83 square miles. — The living (All Saints), a vicarage, with the curacies of Silverstone Brooke, and Langham, in the archd^y of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, is valued at £28. 3s. 11½d. :

OAKHAMPTON (or OKEHAMPTON), DEVON, a parish, borough, and market town, in the hun^d. of Lifton, union of Oakhampton, situated in a valley watered by the Ocke: 217 miles from London (coach road 195), 22 from Exeter.—Gt. West. Rail. through Bristol and Exeter to Crediton, thence 17 miles: from Derby, through Birmingham and Bristol, 231 miles.—Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 7½ a.m.: post closes 4½ p.m.—The town of Oakhampton is surrounded on every side by hills, and derives its chief importance from being the centre of a rich agricultural district, on the highway from Exeter to Launceston. It was formerly the head of the earldom of Devon. The castle, the romantic ruins of which occupy the summit of a height about a mile south-west of the town, was erected in the time of William the Conqueror, by Baldwin de Brionis. It was a noble edifice, but was dismantled by order of Henry VIII., on the attainder of Henry Courtenay, Marquis of Exeter. The ruins are of great extent, and, from their position in the midst of well-wooded scenery, have a peculiarly picturesque appearance. The church stands, at a short distance from the town, on an eminence; it was rebuilt in 1842, after having been destroyed by fire in February of the same year, except the ancient tower, which is surmounted by crocketed pinnacles. It is a spacious and handsome structure in the perpendicular style, and, with the churchyard and vicarage, occupies one of the most beautiful situations in the West of England. The other principal public edifices are St. James's ancient episcopal chapel, and places of worship for the Independents and Wesleyan Methodists. The charities produce about £100 a year. Oakhampton returned two members to parliament until it was disfranchised by the Reform Bill. A workhouse has been erected here by the poor-law commissioners, which is capable of accommodating 200 inmates. The Oakhampton union comprises 28 parishes, with a population of about 21,000 persons, spread over an area of 201 square miles.—The living (All Saints), a vicarage in the archd^y. of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, is valued at £20: pres. net income, £600: patron, A. This latter circumstance is ascribed to its neighbourhood with Manchester, and the opening of its large coal beds, and to the facilities for the transit of goods provided within this period. The town consists of several streets, extending chiefly along the Manchester and Leeds road, whence others branch off in various directions, the numerous cotton establishments being their chief feature. It is lighted with gas, and well supplied with water by a public company. A new town-hall, a neat and commodious building, has been erected within the last ten years; its portico, which is copied from the temple of Ceres at Athens, has been much admired. The Blue Coat School, which was endowed with £70,000 by the late Mr. Henshawe, an extensive hat manufacturer, who realised his fortune in Oldham, is also a very handsome building; it cost several thousand pounds, and 100 boys are educated and sustained upon the foundation. Besides this there are several minor charities belonging to the town, the aggregate income of which is about £100 per annum. There are several Independent and Wesleyan chapels here; and the Roman Catholics also have a chapel. Oldham has sent two members to parliament since the passing of the Reform Act. —The living is a perpetual curacy in the diocese of Manchester: pres. net income, £150: patron, Rector of Prestwich: pres. incumbent, T. West. Rail. through Wolverhampton and Shrewsbury to Oswestry station: from Derby, through Stafford, Shrewsbury, &c., 92 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 8½ a.m.: post closes 5½ p.m. — The name of this town is connected with our earliest historical associations, for it was on the site of it that, in 642, was fought the great battle between Oswald, the Christian king of Northumberland, and Penda, the Pagan king of the Mercians, and in which the former was defeated and slain. The peculiar strength of the position soon showed to Edward I., on his arrival there, that he who held it held the keys of the principality of Wales, and the politic monarch therefore soon caused it to be surrounded with walls and fortresses, of which, however, but very few remains now exist. Formerly, a noble castle stood on an eminence, which is said to have been built long before the Conquest, as it was the custom of the Saxons and the Danes to build upon such artificial elevations as that on which the ruins of this castle now lie scattered. Oswestry was at one time the chief market for flannel for Wales, but, in 1621, the merchants removed the mart to Shrewsbury, and the place consequently declined in importance, and is now the centre of the agricultural district, which it is the main means of supplying with domestic necessities. A district church was built in the year 1821, in the upper part of the parish, in which divine service is celebrated in the Welsh language; another district church was consecrated in the town in the year 1837. The Independents, Wesleyans, Baptists, and Primitive Methodists, have chapels here. The free grammar-school was founded early in the 17th century, by Mr. David Holbeck, and it has now an income of about £270 per annum. In the year 1661, Mr. James Phillips, of Southwark, left property in Southwark to found a lecture, to be preached every Thursday in the parish church, the remainder to be given away in flannel to the poor: about 1200 yards of flannel are yearly distributed. Sir Francis Eure, by will, left money to build some almshouses, now called the Porkington Almshouses. The amount of the other charities, including the flannel given to the poor, amounts to about £160 per annum. Oswestry was first incorporated by Richard II. about the year 1397; under the Municipal Act it is divided into seven wards, governed by six aldermen and eighteen common councillors. — The living (St. Oswald), a disch^d vicarage in the archd^y and diocese of St. Asaph, is valued at £23. 15s. 7½d.: pres. net income, £477: patron, Earl Powis: pres. incumbent, T. Oulton Park is the seat of Sir Philip de Malpas Grey Egerton, Bart., a descendant of William le Belward, feudal lord of Malpas, whose eldest son, David le Clero, after the annexation of the earldom of Chester to the crown by Henry III., was sheriff of that county. The son of that powerful baron, Philip, surnamed the Gough, or red, having obtained the manor of Egerton from Wion de Egerton, and having settled there, took, as was at that time usual, the name of Egerton. From him was descended, in several generations, John Egerton, Esq., who married Elizabeth, daughter and heir of Hugh Done, Esq. of Oulton, through whom he obtained the estate of Oulton. One of his posterity, Sir Rowland Egerton, Knt., was created a baronet in 1617. The seventh in descent from that gentleman, Sir Thomas Egerton, was in 1784 raised to the peerage by the title of Baron Grey de Wilton, and in 1801 was further elevated to the titles of Viscount Grey de Wilton, and Earl of Wilton, with reversion, in default of male issue, to the Hon. Thomas Grosvenor, second son of his daughter Eleanor, Countess Grosvenor, and to all her ladyship's younger sons by Earl Grosvenor, successively. On his lordship's death in 1814, the barony of Grey de Wilton expired, but the viscounty and earldom descended according to the patent, while the baronetcy demised to his relative John Egerton, Esq. of Oulton, a descendant of Sir Philip, second son of the first baronet, who was knighted by Charles II. for his loyalty. Of that gentleman the present baronet is the nephew. Sir Philip succeeded to the title and estates in 1829, on the death of his father.

OUNDLÉ, NORTHAMPTON, a parish and market town in Polebrook hun^d, union of Oundle: 78 miles from London, 8 from Thrapston. Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7 a.m. and 3 p.m.: post closes 10 p.m. and 6½ a.m. This town is neat and well built, well paved and lighted, and agreeably situated on a slope on the northern side of the river Nene. In Doomsday-book it was called Undele. The church is a fine edifice in the early English style, with a square tower, surmounted by an hexagonal crocketed spire, 201 feet high. The market-place is neat and commodious. Over the Nene, which in its course almost surrounds the town, there are two bridges, connecting Oundle with the roads to Thrapston and Yaxley. An almshouse was founded here by Sir William Laxton, a native of the place, who settled as a grocer in London, became lord mayor, and died in 1556. An hospital for a warden and sixteen poor women was also founded here in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, by the Rev. Nicholas Latham. Sir William Laxton founded the grammar-school, as did Mr. Latham the other free school, both of the institutions having together an aggregate income of about £160 per annum. The other charities, besides Latham's hospital, produce about £280 a year. Latham's hospital, to which a school has been attached, has an income of £440 per annum. A workhouse has been erected here by the poor-law commissioners, which is capable of accommodating 150 persons. OXFORD, an ancient city, the capital of Oxfordshire, is the splendid seat of a bishopric, and one of the two most celebrated universities in Britain, is situated at the confluence of the rivers Cherwell and Isis: 63 miles from London (coach road 54), 22 from Aylesbury. Gt. West. Rail. to Oxford station: from Derby, through Rugby and Banbury, &c., 95 miles. Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 7 a.m. and 1½ p.m.: post closes 9½ a.m. and 10 p.m. This renowned seat of learning is said by some to take its name from the Saxon word Ozenford, from the ford across the river; and by others from Ouseford, derived from the ancient name of the river Isis. It is built upon a pleasant acclivity, at the junction of the rivers Cherwell and Isis, which almost surround it. The first mention made of Oxford is in an act of confirmation of Pope Martin II. in 802, where it is described as an ancient academy of learning. Didanus, a Saxon prince, founded a monastery here about 730, which was afterwards plundered by the Danes. The inhabitants refused to submit to William the Conqueror, who, in 1067, took the town by storm, and gave it to Robert D'Oiley, by whom a castle was erected on its western extremity; the abbey of Osney was soon afterwards erected by his nephew. William Rufus held a great council here; and Henry I. erected a palace, called Beaumont, at which Richard I. was born. Stephen held a council of the nobility in the town, and, during his wars with the Empress Matilda, besieged the castle, in which she had taken refuge, but from which she afterwards made her escape, by night, over the frozen river. Several councils, connected with ecclesiastical affairs, were held in this town by Stephen's successors. Richard I. granted the city many privileges. In 1319, Pondras, the son of a tanner, endeavoured to induce the inhabitants of Oxford to believe that he was a son of Edward I., but he was soon after executed at Northampton. A conspiracy was formed for assassinating Henry IV., at a tournament to be held in this city, by some of the principal nobility; but the plot being discovered, the conspirators were executed at Greenditch, near Oxford. Henry VIII. erected Oxford into a see. During the reign of Mary, Bishops Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer, were brought from the Tower of London to Oxford, to hold a disputation with the learned men of the university, in St. Mary's Church; and in the following year they were examined by the Bishops of London, Gloucester, and Bristol, who condemned Ridley and Latimer to the stake. Their sentence was carried into execution on October 16th, 1555, at a place called Canditch. In the following March, Cranmer also suffered at the same place. In 1625 the parliament sat for a short time at Oxford, in consequence of the plague then raging in London. At the commencement of the parliamentary war, Lord Say, having driven away Sir John Byron, held the city for the parliament; but after the battle of Edgehill, Charles I. took it, and made it his headquarters. He assembled a parliament here, and opened several negotiations with the parliament of London. Sir Thomas Fairfax afterwards reduced the city by famine, and obliged the King to escape to Newcastle. During the great plague in 1665, the parliament and the courts of law held their sittings at Oxford. In 1681, a parliament also sat here for a few days. The city of Oxford, in its present condition, is more than a mile long from east to west, and, including the suburbs, is nearly four miles in diameter; it has two principal streets, intersecting each other at right angles in the centre, and thus dividing Oxford into four parts. At the point where all the streets meet, there formerly stood a handsome conduit, which was presented, in 1787, by the then Earl of Harcourt. The High Street is the principal street. The Cherwell and Isis are crossed by several stone bridges, the principal of which are the Magdalen Bridge, over the Cherwell, and a recently-erected bridge over the Isis. The exact period of the original foundation of the famous university of Oxford is unknown, but at a very early period the city was much resorted to by students of British history. King Alfred endowed three halls here, which, however, were destroyed by the Danes. Robert D'Oiley, to whom the Conqueror granted the city, founded the collegiate church of St. George for secular canons, which was subsequently annexed to the abbey of Osney, the building being occupied by students. One Robert Pullein, under the patronage of Henry I., was the first who read lectures upon the Scriptures to the students. The monarchs who afterwards sat upon the throne of England encouraged students to settle at the university, and conferred many privileges upon it, so that it gradually increased in importance, although the students sometimes were temporarily obliged to remove from it on account of the plague, or some serious quarrel with the townsmen. In the reign of Henry III. one thousand students came from the university of Paris to receive instruction at Oxford; in the same reign some generous and benevolent persons purchased or erected large houses, and permitted teachers to reside in them to receive students rent free, whereas before that period they lodged in mansions or halls rented from the citizens. From this time, however, the university had gifts and bequests frequently bestowed on it to a large amount. Under Edward II. a converted Jew, named John de Bristol, commenced reading Hebrew lectures here. Edward III. was educated at the university. Dr. Wickliffe, who lived under Richard II., was the first warden of Canterbury College, and his famous Lectures of Divinity were read at Oxford. Pope Gregory XI. issued a bull against them, but the authorities of the college took no notice of it whatever. Edward IV. assumed the title of Protector of the university. Richard III. was also a great patron of it. Henry VIII. and Cardinal Wolsey founded several lectures, and did much for the encouragement of learning. During the later part of his reign, he converted the abbey of Osney into a see, and made Oxfordshire a diocese. Oxford suffered much from the subsequent religious dissensions between the Protestants and Catholics, and also in the parliamentary wars. The parliament did great injury to the university, but Cromwell, who was elected chancellor in 1650, did much to restore it to a flourishing condition. James II. expelled the president and fellows of Magdalen College, because they refused to receive one Farmar whom he had nominated as the president. From the accession of William III. the university of Oxford gradually increased in importance, until it has become one of the principal seats of learning in the world. It was incorporated under Charles I.; the legislative body, which confers all honours and degrees, consists of a meeting of the vice-chancellor, the heads of houses, and the proctors, which regulates the proceedings of the university by statutes, which are assented to by the house of convocation, consisting of the vice-chancellor, proctors, and all doctors and masters who have taken out their regency; the statutes are then ratified by the congregation, composed of the vice-chancellor, the proctors, the necessary regents, and the regents ad placitum. The governing body consists of the chancellor, which is an office for life, generally filled by one of the highest nobility; the high-steward, an office for life, in the nomination of the chancellor; the vice-chancellor, also nominated by the chancellor, and holding office for four years; and two proctors, chosen from the colleges by rotation. There is also a public orator, a keeper of the archives, a registrar, and private officers to each college or hall, besides public lecturers and professors of Divinity, Hebrew, Greek, Civil Law, Medicine, Modern History, Botany, Natural Philosophy, Astronomy, Geometry, Ancient History, Anatomy, Music, Arabic, Poetry, Anglo-Saxon, Common Law, and Chemistry. There are four terms in the year, and degrees are taken out in divinity, law, physio, and the arts. The total revenues of Oxford University, arising from all sources, are £457,490; while those of Cambridge are £377,406, and those of Dublin are £92,300. The total number of members on the books of the university, on 1st January, 1841, was 5,515; of these 238 belonged to University College, 321 to Baliol, 149 to Merton, 346 to Exeter, 828 to Oriel, 303 to Queen's, 158 to New, 161 to Lincoln, 107 to All Souls', 174 to Magdalen, 399 to Brazennose, 128 to Corpus Christi, 914 to Christ Church, 284 to Trinity, 250 to St. John's, 135 to Jesus, 267 to Wadham, 180 to Pembroke, 247 to Worcester, 74 to St. Mary's Hall, 64 to New Inn, 26 to St. Alban, and 99 to St. Edmund. There are 19 colleges and 6 halls, which are corporate bodies, belonging to the class called eleemosynary, and quite distinct from the corporation of the university. All Souls' College was founded in 1437, by Henry Chichele, archbishop of Canterbury, and is celebrated for its large library. Baliol College was founded in the 13th century by John de Baliol of Bernard's Castle, in Durham. Brazennose College, built on the site of several ancient halls, was founded about 1509, by William Smyth, bishop of Lincoln. Richard Fox, bishop of Winchester, founded Corpus Christi College in 1516. Christ Church is a splendid edifice, founded by Cardinal

Wolsey, and is famous for its fine cathedral and hall. Exeter College was founded by Walter de Stapleton, bishop of Exeter, about 1315; the same prelate founded Hertford College. Queen Elizabeth founded Jesus College, which is, however, chiefly indebted to the munificence of one Hugh ap Rice. Richard Fleming, bishop of Lincoln in 1420, and Thomas Rotherham his successor, were the founders of Lincoln College. Magdalen College, one of the noblest of the institutions in the university, was founded by William of Waynfleet, bishop of Winchester. Merton College, the most ancient establishment of the university, was instituted by Walter de Merton, bishop of Rochester, and chancellor of England under Henry III. New College was founded in 1379, by William de Wykeham, bishop of Winchester. Adam de Brom, rector of St. Mary's, Oxford, founded Oriel College in 1324. Pembroke College was founded early in the 17th century, by Dr. Abbot, archbishop of Canterbury, with some large charitable bequests of which he was trustee. Robert Eglesfield, confessor to Queen Philippa, wife of Edward III., founded Queen's College in 1340. St. John's College was founded by Sir Thomas White in 1555. Sir Thomas Pope was the founder of Trinity College in 1554. William of Durham, who flourished in the thirteenth century, was the founder of University College. Worcester College, which stands upon the site of the ancient Gloucester Hall, was founded chiefly by a bequest of Sir Thomas Cookes in 1701. Nicholas Wadham, Esq., of Somerset, founded Wadham College in 1611. St. Alban's Hall, Edmund Hall, St. Mary's Hall, St. Mary Magdalen Hall, and New Inn Hall, are ancient foundations, some of which have been renewed in modern times. The principal and most interesting buildings connected with the university are the Schools, the Bodleian Library, the Theatre, the Clarendon Printing-house, the Radcliffe Library, the Ashmolean Museum, the Observatory, the Physic Garden, and the University Church. The numerous buildings that are connected with the colleges, are noble specimens of the architecture of the several periods in which they were erected; many of the most eminent learned men whom England has produced were educated in them. Besides those connected with the university, there are several other handsome churches. The town-hall was erected in 1752. There is a commodious market-place, opened in 1774. The gaol is erected on the site of the ancient castle. The trade manufactures of Oxford are inconsiderable, its chief importance being derived from its university. There is a canal communicating with the Thames, with convenient wharfs and quays. Henry II. granted the first charter to Oxford, which was confirmed by subsequent monarchs. Under the Municipal Reform Act, the corporation consists of a mayor, nine aldermen, and thirty councillors. The magistrates have no jurisdiction in the university. The city is divided into five wards, and is well lighted with gas, paved, and cleansed. The principal charities are the Radcliffe Infirmary, erected by the trustees of Dr. Radcliffe; an hospital, erected by a bequest of the Rev. W. Stone in 1699, for eight poor women, who have each an allowance of £20. 10s. a year; almshouses, founded by Edmund Boulter, with an annual income of

£333: Tawney's almshouses for six poor people, each of whom receives £20 a year; and Parsons' almshouses for eight poor people, each of whom has £30 a year. There are also a great number of small parochial charities. There are the ruins of several ancient monastic institutions in the neighbourhood of the city. The neighbourhood is said to be the highest ground in England, and in many points it certainly commands most beautiful and extensive prospects. — The living (St. James), a disch^d vicarage in the diocese of Worcester, is valued at £7. 10s. 2½d.: pres. net income, £66: patron, Earl of Aylesford: pres. incumbent, Charles Finch, 1824: contains 2,190 acres: 62 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 340: ass^d prop^r £2,421: poor rates in 1848, £145. 12s. — Great Packington Park is the seat of the Earl of Aylesford, to whose ancestor the manor was demised in the early part of the eighteenth century, from Sir Clement Fisher, whose daughter he had married. The mansion, which is a spacious but unornamented structure, was much improved by the late Earl and his father, and is now a most commodious residence, surrounded by grounds of highly picturesque beauty, and which owe their chief grace of natural and wild effect to his lordship's correct and cultivated taste. The church, which is situated within the boundaries of the park, was rebuilt in the latter part of the last century, after a design from Bonomo. The Earl of Aylesford and Baron of Guernsey derives his descent from the second son of the Hon. Heneage Finch, Earl of Winchelsea and Nottingham. That gentleman adopted the profession of the law, in which he attained considerable eminence, and was appointed solicitor-general in 1678, from which office he was removed, in 1686, by James II., and afterwards became the principal of the advocates retained for their defence on the celebrated trial of the seven bishops. He represented the university in the convention parliament, and in all the subsequent parliaments, until he was raised to the peerage by the title of Baron Guernsey in 1702-3; and on the accession of George I. in 1714, was elevated to the title of Earl of Aylesford, being also constituted Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. From that nobleman the present Earl, whose father was steward of the household in 1812, is a direct descendant.

Money orders issued at Bodmin: London letters deliv^d 3.20 a.m.: post closes 7½ a.m. The town is beautifully situated on an estuary close upon the Bristol Channel, and at the junction of the river Camel with some smaller streams, and is surrounded by the most varied and picturesque scenery. At a very early period, Padstow was known by the name of Lodenek at Heylemith, and the first religious house, called Laffenack, is supposed to have been established here in 432, by St. Patrick. About a century afterwards, St. Petroc founded a monastery, which became noted and opulent, and was visited by Athelstan in 926, on which occasion great privileges were conferred on it by the monarch, who also named the town Adelstow. In 981, the monastery was burnt by the Danes, after which it was refounded at Bodmin. In 1344, this place supplied ships for the siege of Calais. In 1645, Prince Charles, afterwards Charles II., resided here. The inhabitants were then zealous royalists, but five years afterwards they sided with the parliament. During the last century, Padstow was frequently attacked by large bodies of miners, who broke open the granaries, and seized upon all the corn. The streets of the town are paved, and the houses roofed with the blue slate found in the neighbourhood. The harbour was anciently one of the finest upon this coast, but it is now partially blocked up with sand. The chief trade is in corn and malt. Several of the inhabitants are employed in shipbuilding, and rope and sail-making. The church is a handsome structure, with a curious pulpit and font. The town was incorporated by Elizabeth, but it is now under the jurisdiction of the petty sessions of St. Colomb. On Christmas-day, and May-day, the inhabitants preserve many singular customs. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. There are a few small educational charities, amounting altogether to about £180 per annum. The living (St. Petroc), a disch^d vicarage in the diocese of Exeter, is valued at £11. 3s. 4d.: pres. net income, £202: patron, C. P. The town stands upon the slope of Spoonbed hill, near a branch of the Stroud river. The inhabitants were chiefly employed in the manufacture of cloth, but within the last few years, with the exception of two out of twenty-four mills, it has left the parish. There are freestone and weatherstone quarries near the town. The church is a large handsome edifice, erected at different periods; with a fine ring of twelve bells, a lofty spire, and, in the interior, a handsome altar-piece, and some monuments to the family of Jerningham. There is a large British encampment at the top of Spoonbed hill. When Charles I. was besieging Gloucester, he encamped his forces on this hill; and it is said that, after having raised the siege, as he was sitting upon a stone near the camp, one of his sons asked when they should return home. "Alas!" replied Charles, "I have no home to go to." Sir Anthony Kingston, lord of this manor and knight-marshal, in the time of Edward VI., erected a gallows on Shepscombe Green, for the execution of insurgents, and granted an acre of land to an inhabitant of the parish to act as the hangman; the spot is still called "Hangman's Acre." Rail. through Swindon, Stonehouse, and Chepstow, to Swansea: from Derby, through Birmingham, Gloucester, &c., 250 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7 a.m.: post closes 10 p.m. — This town is agreeably situated upon the borders of Down Pool, a navigable creek of Milford-Haven, the two branches of which form a kind of peninsula; the country in the vicinity is rich and fertile. Pembroke chiefly consists of one long street, and was anciently surrounded by a wall, some portions of which still exist. The two churches of St. Michael and St. Mary are both ancient structures, but the chief object of interest in Pembroke is the remains of its castle, supposed to have been founded by Arnulph de Montgomery, in the reign of King Henry I. It was soon after rebuilt by Gerald Steward. As late as the parliamentary war, the castle was a place of great importance, and was at first held for the King by General Laugharne, with Colonels Powell and Poyer. In 1648, after the battle of St. Fagan's, they were besieged by Cromwell, who subsequently obliged them to surrender at discretion. The three commanders were found guilty of high treason, and sentenced to death, but Cromwell determined that one of them only should suffer; the lot fell upon Colonel Poyer, who was accordingly executed. The castle stands upon an elevated rocky point of land to the west of the town, and there is a fine view of it from the water. One of the rooms in the outer ward was said, by Leland, to have been the birth-place of Henry VII. The Wogan, so called from the British word for a cave, is a large cavern in the rock, opening into the water, and running beneath the buildings. Pembroke was first incorporated by Richard III.; under the Municipal Reform Act the borough is divided into two wards, and governed by six aldermen and eighteen councillors. It has a commission of the peace, and, in conjunction with Tenby, Milford, and Wiston, returns one member to parliament. The mayor is the returning officer. The town is also a polling-place for the county. Pembroke has a small export trade of cattle, corn, and butter. The Independents, Baptists, Wesleyan Methodists, and Quakers, have places of worship here. The charities amount to about £170 per annum. There is a workhouse, with accommodation for 180 persons, for the poor-law union of Pembroke, which comprehends 29 parishes, with a population of about 18,000 persons. — The living is a union of three vicarages, St. Mary, St. Michael, and St. Nicholas, in the archd^y and diocese of St. David's: pres. net income, £439: patron, Sir J. In 1811, Colonel Taylor joined the 22d Light Dragoons in the East Indies, and distinguished himself greatly during the Mahratta war, especially in the actions of Bucktownlie, Nagnore, and Ashta, in which latter he took upon himself to countermand the retreat, and to order measures which were very influential in putting an end to the war. At the siege of Copaul-Droog he commanded a battery, blew open the first gate with a galloper gun, and heading the forlorn hope, stormed in succession five circles of fortification. At the summit of the fort he was shot through the lungs and body, the ball killing a grenadier behind him. He was afterwards engaged in active service at the Cape of Good Hope, against the Caffres; in 1826 he was major of the 95th regiment at Malta; in 1827 he quelled a mutiny at the depot, after being three times shot by the mutineers, for which service he received the expression of the approbation of his Majesty. Colonel Sir Pringle Taylor traces his descent from the Norman Baron Taillefer, who accompanied the Conqueror to England, and distinguished himself at Hastings; and his father, Lord-Chief Justice of Jamaica in 1784, and his grandfather, Judge Taylor, his Majesty's Lord High Commissioner for New Jersey in 1776, both distinguished themselves by their attachment to the cause of their sovereign during the American war.

PENRHYN, CARNARVON, a township and seaport in Llandegai parish—(which see for access,

&c.)—North Wales, adjacent to Bangor: 256 miles from London, 1 from Bangor, 9 from Carnarvon. — (Popⁿ. with the parish.) — The port, which is situated at the point of junction of the river Ogwen with the Menai Straits, is looked upon as the harbour of the city of Bangor. It has a commodious quay and extensive pier. Penrhyn slate quarry at Dolawin, the property of Mr. Pennant, is one of the most remarkable curiosities in Wales. Masses of slate, 100 feet high, are procured from it, and made into various articles upon the spot. About 200 tons of slate are daily taken from the quarry, and are exported to all parts of the kingdom. As many as 2000 persons are employed here. — Penrhyn Castle is the seat of the Hon. Edward Gordon Douglas Pennant, lieutenant-colonel in the army, and M.P. for Carnarvonshire. The castle is a fine old building, and appears to have been erected in the time of Henry VI. by its then proprietor, the hero, Gwillim ap Gryffyd. It contains a magnificent hall, and several spacious and commodious apartments. There is a neat and elegant chapel at a little distance from the mansion. The park is very extensive; it is intersected by the river Ogwen, which forms picturesque cascades in different parts; the principal entrance is by a grand gateway. There is an ancient airlas, or drinking-horn, of Piers Gryffyd, still preserved here. The present occupier of the castle is the descendant of Thomas, son of David ap Tudor Pennant of Penrhyn; he was abbot of Basingwerk, Flintshire, and celebrated for his hospitality and munificence, in a poem by Gwttyn Owain, a Welsh bard of 1480. His descendant, Edward Pennant, Esq., was Chief-Justice of Jamaica at the end of the 17th century, and was the grandfather of Richard Pennant, who purchased Penrhyn Castle, and was created Baron Penrhyn, of the kingdom of Ireland. His lordship dying without issue in 1808, was succeeded by his cousin, George Hay Dawkins, Esq., who assumed the surname and arms of Pennant, and died in 1840, leaving daughters, his coheirs, the eldest of whom, Juliana Isabella Mary, married the Hon. Edward Gordon Douglas, brother of the Earl of Morton, who is the present proprietor, and who thereupon assumed the surname and arms of Pennant.

PENRHYS (or PENRICE), GLAMORGAN, a parish in Swansea hun^d. and union, South Wales: 226 miles from London (coach road 218), 12 from Swansea, 14 from Llanelly. — Gt. West. PENRITH (or NEW PENRITH), CUMBERLAND, a parish and market town in Leath ward, union of Penrith, comprising the townships of Burrogate, Dockray, Middlegate with Sandgate, Netherend-bridge with Carleton, and Plympton-Head: 282 miles from London (coach road 283), 17 from Carlisle. — Nor. West. Rail. through Crewe and Lancaster to Penrith station: from Derby, through Crewe, &c., 182 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 9 a.m. and 8½ p.m.: post closes 10 p.m., and 4 p.m. — This ancient town derives its name from the British words signifying red summit, and was so called from its situation in a pleasant valley at the foot of an eminence of red colour. It is within the district of Inglewood Forest, in which Edward I. is said to have killed 200 bucks in one day, but which was disforested by Henry VIII. The origin of the town is unknown, but since the Conquest it has been alternately possessed by the English and Scottish monarchs. In the reign of Edward III. the town was pillaged and burnt by 30,000 Scots, under Sir William Douglas, who, however, contracted a disease then raging at Penrith, which, on their return, carried off one-third of his countrymen. In 1597 and 1598 the same disease carried off 2,260 of the inhabitants of this parish. Penrith consists chiefly of one long street, is well paved and lighted, and watered by the three small streams — the Eamont, the Lowther, and the Petrell. On Beacon Hill there is a square stone edifice, commanding an extensive view of some most delightful scenery. The church, rebuilt in 1722, is a spacious edifice, containing two gilt chandeliers, presented by the Duke of Portland, together with some monuments preserved from a more ancient structure. To the west of the town there are the remains of an ancient castle, which is supposed to have been built on the site of a Roman encampment; and which Richard, Duke of Gloucester, who resided there for some time, repaired and enlarged, but it was dismantled after the parliamentary war. Freestone, slate, and limestone are found near the town, which give much employment to the inhabitants; and there is also a small manufacture of cotton goods carried on in the parish. The Quakers, Independents, Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists, and Scottish Seceders, have places of worship here. The free school, founded by Bishop Strickland in 1340, and subsequently refounded by Queen Elizabeth, has now endowments to the amount of about £30 per annum, together with a share in five annual exhibitions at Queen's College, Oxford. Besides, there is an endowed school for girls. Three miles from the town there are two remarkable excavations in a perpendicular rock, called the Giant's Caves; also a circular intrenchment, called King Arthur's Round Table. — The living (St. Andrew), a vicarage, with the curacy of Trinity, in the archd^y and diocese of Carlisle, is valued at £12. 6s. 3d.: pres. net income, £200: patron, Bishop of Carlisle: pres. incumbent, W. H. Milner, 1845: contains 6,640 acres: 1,192 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 6,429: probable popⁿ in 1849, 7,393: ass^d. prop^r. £17,592: poor rates in 1848, £936. 9s. — Market day, Tuesday. PENROSE, CORNWALL, a small hamlet near the Land's End. — Penrose is the seat of the Rev. John Rogers, also of Treasowe, near Penzance, M.A., canon-residentary of the cathedral church of St. Peter at Exeter. Mr. Rogers is the representative of a branch of the family of Rogers, of Lanke, in the parish of St. Breward, which settled there at the commencement of the sixteenth century. His lineal ancestor, John Rogers, Esq., of Truthwall, was first commissioner in Charles I.'s armies; his grandson, Hugh, high sheriff of Cornwall in 1770, purchased the manor and estates of Penrose; his grandson is the present Mr. Rogers, who is a magistrate for the county, and succeeded his father (who sat in parliaments for West Loo in 1774, for Penryn in 1782, for Helstone in 1785, and was recorder of Helstone) in 1832. — Fair: Tuesday before Ascension-day.

PENRYN, CORNWALL, a borough, market town, township, and chapelry, in St. Gluvias parish: 294 miles from London (coach road 266). — Gt. West. Rail. through Bristol and Exeter to Plymouth, thence 50 miles: from Derby, through Birmingham and Bristol, &c., 308 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 8 p.m.: post closes 9½ a.m. — This town is pleasantly situated on the declivity of a hill, at the head of an inlet from Falmouth harbour. It consists of a large street, from which smaller ones diverge, and is paved, lighted, and well supplied with water from the adjacent hills, a stream from one of which forms a handsome cascade. The houses are well built, and the place is highly respectable in appearance. From a very early period of time it has belonged to the Bishops of Exeter, one of whom, Walter Branscombe, in 1258, obtained for it a grant for a market and a fair; and in 1270 founded a collegiate church, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin and St. Thomas of Canterbury. At the dissolution, its revenues amounted to £210. 13s. 2d. About the commencement of the parliamentary war, the royalists held the town, but it was taken by Fairfax in 1646. The port, which is a member of that of Falmouth, has a large trade in the shipping of granite from the neighbouring quarries; in arsenic, leather, and paper; flour, corn, coal, timber, and saltpetre, are the imports. There is a custom-house, a commodious quay, with spacious warehouses, and an iron swing-bridge over the river. The manufactures are paper, woollen cloth, arsenic, and gunpowder, but there are also several extensive tanneries, breweries, and corn-mills. There is no church, but the inhabitants attend that of Gluvias, which is only about 100 yards distant, and in which there is a lecturer who receives £40 per annum from an estate in the borough. The borough was first incorporated by James I.; under the Municipal Reform Act, it is governed by four aldermen and twelve councillors. In conjunction with Falmouth, it returns two members to parliament. The Independents, the Wesleyan Methodists, and the Quakers, have places of worship here. The charities altogether amount to nearly £200 per annum. — Contains 290 acres: 598 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 3,337: probable popⁿ in 1849, 3,838: ass^d. prop^r. £5,117: poor rates in 1848, £1,197. 14s. — King's Arms Inn.

His lordship is the son of the late Sir John Shelly Sydney, who was created a baronet in 1818, and in 1793 assumed, by sign manual, the additional surname and arms of Sydney. Sir John was the heir and representative, by the maternal side, of the Beaumonts and Beauchamps, ancient earls of Warwick, the Dudleys and Sydneys, earls of Leicester, and was directly descended from Gundred, the youngest daughter of William I. The Sydney family derive from Sir William, chamberlain to Henry II. Sir William, one of his descendants, to whom Edward VI. granted Peshurst, was chamberlain and steward of the household to Henry VIII., and a commander at Flodden. His son, Sir Henry, lord-president of Wales, and lord-deputy of Ireland, under Elizabeth, is described by Dr. Zouch as a brave soldier, consummate general, able counsellor, and wise legislator. He was the father of the celebrated Sir Philip Sydney, described as the most lively pattern of virtue, and the first gentle- man of Europe. Sir Henry's second son, Robert, was created, by James I., Baron Sydney of Penarth, Viscount Lisle, and Earl of Leicester. His son was the father of the celebrated Algernon Sydney, and of the Countess of Sunderland, the Sacharissa of the poet Waller. The earldom became extinct in 1743. The third son of the fourth earl, Robert, left two daughters, the eldest of whom, by her marriage with Sir Bysshe Shelly, Bart., of Goring Castle, became the mother of Sir John Shelly Sydney. Lord De L'Isle, his son, and the representative of the family, was formerly surveyor-general of the Duchy of Cornwall.

In 1595, the Spaniards landed near Mousehole, about two miles and a half distant, burned that village, together with Newlyn, and advanced to Penzance. Sir Francis Godolphin endeavoured to defend the town, but his followers being seized with a panic and deserting him, he was obliged to leave it, and the Spaniards, therefore, entered and burned it; but, during the following day, the Cornish men rallied and drove away the invaders. The town was soon rebuilt, and became a flourishing port, receiving many privileges from various kings of England. Charles I. levied £28 from it as ship-money, and during the parliamentary war it was plundered by the forces of Sir Thomas Fairfax, in consequence of its previous favourable reception of the royalists, and, on the Restoration, Charles II. made it one of the stannary towns. There is a large new church erected upon the site of an ancient one that was burned by the Spaniards in 1595. The borough was first incorporated by James I. Under the new municipal act, a court of quarter sessions has been granted, and a recorder appointed. The borough is divided into two wards, governed by six aldermen and eighteen councillors. Penzance chiefly consists of four streets, with a market-place in the midst. A new guild-hall and market-house were built in 1838. The streets consist of neatly-built houses, and are well lighted and paved. In consequence of its salubrity, and the beautiful scenery which surrounds it, many invalids resort to Penzance, being much frequented as a watering-place. It is the port for the whole of Mount's Bay, and has a fine pier 800 feet long. In consequence of the mining operations carried on in the district, large quantities of timber are landed at this port; iron, tallow, hemp, &c., are also imported. The chief exports are tin, copper ore, china clay, leather, wool, and pilchards. There are several large mines in the vicinity. Near the town there is a curious ancient cromlech, called Layon Quoit, about 70 feet in diameter; and in the neighbourhood is the celebrated St. Michael's Mount (which see). The Royal Geological Society of Cornwall has a valuable museum at Penzance; and there are also several other literary and scientific, and some charitable associations. There is a public library, containing more than 4,000 volumes. The Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, Bible Christians, Baptists, Primitive and other Methodists, Quakers, Presbyterians, Catholics, and Jews, have places of worship here. A workhouse, with accommodation for 400 persons, has been erected by the poor-law commissioners for the union of Penzance, which comprises 19 parishes, extending over 107 square miles, with a population of about 40,000. Penzance was the birth-place of Sir Humphrey Davy, the celebrated natural philosopher. In consequence of his chemical and philosophical researches, he was at an early age appointed professor of chemistry at the Royal Institution; in 1802 he became professor to the Board of Agriculture; in 1818 he was created a baronet; and in 1820 was elected president of the Royal Society. We are indebted to him for a great number of important and valuable discoveries. He died at Geneva in 1829, and made a small bequest to the master of the grammar-school at Penzance, on condition of giving the boys a holiday annually upon his birth-day, the 17th of December. At Peper-Harrow is the seat of George Alan Brodrick, Viscount Middleton, and Baron Brodrick of Middleton, county of Cork; and Baron Brodrick of Peper-Harrow, in the peerage of Great Britain. His lordship is descended from Sir Alan Brodrick, Knt., who, in 1660, was appointed surveyor, estimator, and extensor-general in Ireland, and obtained large grants of land in that kingdom. His brother and successor, Sir St. John, was the grandfather of Alan Brodrick, a lawyer of eminence, who, after having filled the offices of speaker in the House of Commons in Ireland, and solicitor and attorney-general in that country, was raised to the peerage of Ireland as Baron Brodrick in 1715, and was created Viscount Middleton in 1717, upon his appointment to the office of lord high chancellor of Ireland. His great-grandson, George, the fourth viscount, was raised to the peerage of the United Kingdom as Baron Brodrick of Peper-Harrow, in 1796; and, on his death in 1836, was succeeded by his son, the present viscount.—Peper-Harrow is the seat of the Rev. Lawrence William Eliot, who is the rector of the parish, and a magistrate and deputy-lieutenant for the county. Mr. Eliot traces his descent from John Eliot, Esq. of Godalming, who purchased the estate of Busbridge in the reign of Henry VIII. Two of his descendants were knighted—one by James I., and the other by William III.

PETERBOROUGH, NORTHAMPTON, an ancient city and liberty, the seat of a see, in the union of Peterborough, on the northern bank of the river Nene: 76 miles from London (coach road 81), 14 from Stamford.—Gt. Nor. Rail. to Peterborough station: from Derby, through Syston to Peterborough, &c., 83 miles.—Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 7 a.m.: post closes 10 p.m.—The city of Peterborough stands in a pleasant situation, on the north bank of the river Nene. Its ancient name was Medeswelhamsted, or Medeshamsted, from a whirlpool which existed in the river, then called the Aufona. At the time of the heptarchy, Peada, king of Mercia, having been converted to Christianity, founded a monastery here about 655, which his brother Wulfhere completed in expiation of the murder of two of his sons. This monastery was dedicated to St. Peter, and becoming very opulent and flourishing, gave to the town the name of Petriburgus. In the ninth century, the town was plundered and the monastery destroyed by the Danes, but it was restored in the following century by Ethelwold, bishop of Winchester. At the time of the Conquest, Hereward, the last Saxon warrior who bade defiance to William, sailed from Flanders, landed in Lincolnshire, and, amongst other exploits, entered this city, and partially burnt and plundered the monastery. Abbot Turolf then erected a fort or castle upon the mound now called Tot-hill. In 1116 this town was much injured by fire, and it also suffered severely during the disturbances in the reign of John. The abbots of Peterborough sat in parliament; and, at the dissolution, the revenues of the abbey were estimated at £1,972. 7s. ½d.; the conventual church then became the cathedral of the diocese. Queen Catherine, the first wife of Henry VIII., was buried in this church in 1535; and, in 1587, the funeral of Mary, Queen of Scots, took place there, when the sermon was preached by the Bishop of Lincoln. Charles I. levied £120 upon this city as ship-money. During the parliamentary war, the forces of the parliament, being stationed in the town, did much injury to the cathedral. Henry VIII. separated the city, together with the counties of Northampton and Rutland, from the see of Lincoln, and erected them into a separate see in 1541; the last abbot of Peterborough was then appointed the first bishop, the conventual church of the monastery appropriated as the cathedral, and the abbot's residence as the episcopal palace. The present bishop is the Right Rev. George Davys, D.D., who was consecrated in 1839. The county of Leicester has recently been added to this see. The cathedral is a fine old edifice, in the Norman and the early English styles of architecture; it has a low lantern tower rising from the centre, and an ancient Norman gateway. The west front is the most beautiful portion of the cathedral, consisting of three handsome lofty arches, each surmounted by a decorated gable pierced with windows; on either side is a turret surmounted by a spire; and there is also a square tower at the north-west angle of the nave. The choir contains the shrine of St. Tibba, and formerly held the tomb of Queen Catherine. The remains of Mary, Queen of Scots, who was buried here, have been removed to Westminster. The cathedral contains several other ancient monuments. Its length from east to west is 471 feet, and its breadth along the transept is 180 feet. Besides the cathedral, Peterborough contains a church and a chapel of ease. The city is formed of several regular and well-built streets, with neat houses; it is well paved, lighted with gas, and well supplied with water. The chief trade is in corn, coal, lime, timber, bricks, and stone. The river Nene, which is crossed by a wooden bridge, is not navigable for shipping. Peterborough sends two members to parliament, and is a polling-place for the northern division of the county. The Independents and the Wesleyan Methodists have places of worship here. The cathedral grammar-school is endowed with £64. 13s. 4d. per annum, with a share in five scholarships and a fellowship at St. John's College, Cambridge; another school is endowed with £30 per annum, and six acres of land; and a third with £16 per annum. There are other charities to the amount of about £600 per annum, of which £538. 16s. are the annual revenues of the town feoffment. The poor-law commissioners have erected a workhouse, with accommodation for 200 persons, for the union of Peterborough, which comprises 39 parishes, extending over 120 square miles, with a population of about 21,000. Peterborough gives the title of earl to the family of Mordaunt, but the title is now extinct. This city was the birth-place of John of Peterborough, an historian of the fourteenth century, and abbot of the monastery; also of Sir John Hill, a voluminous writer, born in 1716, who practised as a physician, and invented several quack medicines: he wrote on every kind of subject, and it was said of him by Garriek—

"For physic and farces his rival there scarce is;
His farces are physic, his physic a farce is."

Archdeacon Paley, the famous divine and moralist, was born at Peterborough in 1743, and was educated as a sizar of Christ's College, Cambridge, of which he became a fellow in 1766. In 1776 he was appointed to a vicarage in Westmoreland; in 1780 he was made a prebendary in the cathedral of Carlisle, of which he became archdeacon in 1782, and chancellor in 1785. He was subsequently — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 9^h a.m.: post closes 4 p.m. — This town is agreeably situated upon the side of a hill, at the bottom of which runs a stream called Pickering Beck. The foundation of it is ascribed to a British king named Peridurus, who flourished 270 years before the Christian era. Its name is said to be derived from its founder having lost a ring whilst bathing in the river, and having found it again in the body of a pika. There once stood a castle upon a hill to the west of the town, in which Richard II. was imprisoned before his removal to Pontefract. Queen Elizabeth is also supposed to have been imprisoned here. The church is a large and handsome building. The town of Pickering belongs to the Duchy of Lancaster, and has jurisdiction over several adjacent villages, known as the "honour of Pickering." There are places of worship here for the Wesleyan Methodists and the Quakers. One of the schools is endowed with about £100 per annum. The poor-law commissioners have erected a workhouse here, with accommodation for 100 persons, for the union of Pickering, which comprises 28 parishes, extending over 134 miles, with a population of about 10,000. Rail. through Bristol and Exeter to Plymouth station: from Derby, through Birmingham, Bristol, &c., 258 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 8 a.m.: post closes 5.9 p.m. — This important seaport town is beautifully situated at the conflux of the rivers Tamar and Plym with the sea. To the south, and running towards the English Channel, is an extensive bay called Plymouth Sound; to the west is the noble harbour of the Hamoaze, formed by the estuary of the Tamar, and between it and Plymouth is the suburb of Stonehouse; to the east is the creek called Catwater, where the Plym expands upon the Sound below an upper estuary called the Lary. Between the Hamoaze and the Catwater, and opening from the Sound, there are two creeks called Mill-bay and Sutton-pool, about half a mile in length. The town thus occupies a peninsula, which is again subdivided in three peninsulæ. Plymouth is supposed to have been the Tamerswerth of the Saxons, and at the time of the Conquest was merely a small fishing town, called South-town-on-Sutton; and afterwards Sutton-Prior, or Sutton-Valetort, part of it being on the lands of the Prior of Plympton, and part on those of the Valetorts. In the reign of Henry VI. it obtained its present appellation. At a very early period the British navy made this port their rendezvous, and in 1355 Edward the Black Prince embarked, and on his return landed here. Not long afterwards the French landed, and attempted to burn the town, but were repulsed by Courtenay, Earl of Devonshire. They again effected a landing in the reign of Henry IV., under the Marshal of Bretagne, and burnt 600 houses. The town declined in importance till the time of Henry VI., when the Prior of Plympton greatly improved it, and it again became frequented as a place of commerce; it was then fortified to guard against other attacks. In 1439 the town was incorporated. The fortifications were strengthened, and the harbour improved in 1512. During the reign of Elizabeth, Sir Francis Drake, at his own expense, constructed a water-course from Dartmoor, to supply the town with water. In 1588, the British fleet, of 120 sail, intended to oppose the Armada, assembled in Plymouth Sound under Drake, Howard, and Hawkins. In 1595, the Spaniards having landed on the coast of Cornwall, were repulsed by Sir Francis Godolphin, and 22 chests full of papal bulls, dispensations, and pardons, were burnt in Plymouth market-place.

The fleet met here before starting on the expedition against Cadiz in 1596. In 1625, Charles I. came from Portsmouth with 120 ships and 6,000 troops, and was sumptuously entertained by the corporation. £190 was levied upon this town as ship-money. At the civil war, the inhabitants sided with the parliament, and in 1643 the town stood out against a siege of three months, after which the royalists, commanded by Prince Maurice and Colonel Digby, were obliged to withdraw. Sir Richard Grenville then endeavoured to blockade the town, but was unsuccessful. At the Restoration the citadel was erected, and the fortifications improved. In 1815, the Bellerophon anchored in the Sound on her voyage to St. Helena with Napoleon; in 1828, the Russian fleet was for some time stationed in the harbour; and in 1829, Plymouth was visited by Don Miguel, Regent of Portugal. Plymouth is chiefly celebrated for its extensive and commodious harbour, and its importance as a naval station and a place of commerce. The chief harbours are the Sound, Sutton Pool, the Hamoaze, Stonehouse Pool, Baron Pool, and the Catwater. The Sound has accommodation for 2,000 vessels, and its security has been much increased by the construction of the gigantic and wonderful Breakwater. This astonishing work consists of immense blocks of Plymouth marble, and is 1,760 feet long at the base, and 120 broad; the flat surface on the top is a fine promenade, and is approached by three flights of steps. At the east of the Sound is a quay for vessels taking in fresh water, and near it there is a reservoir which will contain 12,000 tons. The citadel is an extensive and noble fortification. Upon a rock, about 15 miles to the S.S.W., stands the celebrated Eddystone lighthouse. The church of St. Andrew is a large ancient building, with a lofty square tower; that of St. Charles the Martyr is a neat edifice. The Exchange and the Custom-house are substantial and commodious structures. There is a magnificent iron bridge over the river Lary, built by the Earl of Morley in 1827. The Royal Hotel, Assembly Room, and Theatre, are noble buildings. There is also an Athenæum and a Freemasons' Hall. Plymouth has a large import trade in timber from North America and the Baltic, and in colonial goods from the West Indies. There is a coasting trade with London, Newcastle, Bristol, and Newport. Numbers of pilchards are exported to Italy. The manufactures are inconsiderable. There is a mineral spring at Plymouth, called the Victoria Spa. The corporation of the town claims to be by prescription, and has charters from eleven Sovereigns, beginning with Henry VI. Under the new municipal act the town-council consists of four aldermen and twelve councillors, and the borough is divided into six wards. A commission of the peace has been granted, and a court of quarter sessions and a recorder appointed. The borough, irrespectively of the suburbs, returns two members to parliament. The town is well lighted with gas. There are places of worship here for the Independents, Baptists, Presbyterians, Wesleyan Methodists, Quakers, Unitarians, Roman Catholics, and Jews. There are a few endowed schools. "The Old Church Twelves" is an endowed almshouse for twelve widows, each of whom have 1s. 6d. per week. There is also an almshouse for twelve poor single women; two funds for the clothing and education of poor boys; Lady Rogers' charity, endowed with about £700 per annum, for the clothing and education of poor girls; and other useful charitable institutions, producing altogether about £2,300 per annum. Plymouth was the birth-place of Sir Thomas Edmonds, an eminent statesman and political writer; he was born in 1568, and died in 1639; also of Sir John Hawkins, the brave admiral, who commanded a portion of the fleet that defeated the Armada; he is also known as being the first person who introduced slavery to the West Indies, where he died in 1595, at the age of 74; also of Jacob Bryant, a learned antiquary and philologist, who was born in 1715, and died in 1804; of the royal academicians, Northcote and Eastlake; of Haydon, the historical painter, and of Samuel Prout, the eminent painter in water-colours. --- Contains 2,300 acres: 7,842 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 36,527: ass^d. prop^r. £192,547: poor rates in 1848, £11,580. 13s. --- Market days, Monday and Thursday. Sir Thomas was lost at sea, in the Blenheim, whilst returning from the East Indies in 1807; and was succeeded by his son, the present Baronet. At Plymouth is also the seat of Edmund Leopold Lockyer, Esq., of Emmanuel College, Cambridge.—Mr. Lockyer is descended from the ancient family of the Lockyers of Shropshire. Edmund Lockyer, Esq., settled at Plymouth in 1750, and was three times mayor of the place. His son Edmund, M.D., F.L.S., &c., died in 1836, and was succeeded by his grandson, the present representative of the family.

PLYMPTON MAURICE (or EARL'S-PLYMPTON), Devon, a borough, market town, and parish in Plympton hun^d, union of Plympton St. Mary: 242 miles from London, 19 from Totness.---(For access and postal arrangements, see above.)---This place, which takes its name from its situation near the river Plym, is spoken of in Doomsday-book as a Terre-Regia. It was anciently the head of the Honour of Plympton, which Henry I. granted to Richard de Rivers, afterwards Earl of Devon, who resided at the castle, the ruins of which are still in existence. Other members of that family obtained great privileges for the town. Edward III. made it a stannary town, and it formerly returned two members to parliament, but was disfranchised by the Reform Act. It was also a borough by prescription, and received several charters from different monarchs, but it is not included in the municipal act. The town principally consists of two irregular streets; the guild-hall is an ancient edifice, containing a portrait, painted by himself, of Sir Joshua Reynolds, who was a native of the town. The church was founded in 1446, and contains some ancient monuments. The Independents have a place of worship here. Hele's school is endowed with £180 per annum; and there are other charities, which produce altogether about £251 per annum. Sir Joshua Reynolds, whose father was a clergyman, was born here in 1723, and at a very early age discovered such a genius for drawing, that his father placed him with a famous portrait-painter, named Hudson. He afterwards went to Italy, and on his return took his place at the head of English portrait-painters. He associated with the first literary characters of the day, by all of whom he was respected and esteemed. When the Royal Academy was instituted in 1768, he was chosen president, and knighted; he then read lectures to the members of the society upon the art of painting. He was a member of the celebrated Literary Club; in 1773, the University of Oxford conferred on him the degree of doctor of laws; in 1783, he was appointed principal painter to the King; he died on the 23d February, 1792, and was buried in St. Paul's Cathedral. His friend Goldsmith has given the following description of his character:--

"Here Reynolds is laid; and, to tell you my mind,
He has left not a wiser or better behind.
His pencil was striking, resistless, and grand;
His manners were gentle, complying, and bland;

VOL. III.

Still born to improve us in every part;
His pencil, our faces; his manners, our heart,
To coxcombs averse, yet most civilly steering,
When they judged without skill, he was still hard of hearing;
When they talked of their Raphaels, Coreggios, and stuff,
He shifted his trumpet, and only took snuff."

PONTEFRAC, WEST RIDING, YORK, a parish, borough, and market town, in the upper division of Osgoldcross wapentake, near the confluence of the rivers Aire and Calder: the parish comprises the chapelry of Knottingley, and the townships of Carleton, East Hardwick, Monkhill, and Tanshelf: 199 miles from London (coach road 177), 11 from Leeds. Nor. West. Rail. through Rugby and Derby to Pontefract station. Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7½ a.m.: post closes 6½ p.m. This town is pleasantly situated on the summit of an eminence near the confluence of the Aire and Calder. It stands upon the site of the ancient Leggedium, a Roman station; it was called Kirkby by the Saxons, and is supposed to have taken the name of Pontfract from the accidental breaking down of a bridge over the Aire, when William, Archbishop of York, and nephew of King Stephen, was passing over it, attended by a large concourse of people, on his return from the Holy Land. Alric, a Saxon chief, founded a castle here, which was rebuilt by Hildebert de Lacy, to whom the Conqueror granted the manor. Thomas, Earl of Leicester, who revolted against Edward II. on account of his partiality to Piers Gaveston, possessed this castle, but it was taken by the king, and the earl being made prisoner, was beheaded here with several of the barons of his party. He was afterwards canonized, and a chapel erected to his memory. His descendant, John of Gaunt, fortified this castle against Richard II., but a reconciliation was afterwards effected. Richard II., after his deposition, was confined for some time, and inhumanly murdered here; and Scroop, Archbishop of York, who had rebelled against Henry IV., was executed here. Queen Margaret resided here while the king was absent in Scotland. After the battle of Agincourt, several French noblemen, who had been taken prisoners, were confined here, and the young king of Scotland was also imprisoned here in the following reign. During the wars of the Roses, several noblemen were imprisoned and put to death here; and, indeed, on many accounts it is of great historical interest. It was at last dismantled by the parliament of the Protectorate. This famous castle stood upon an isolated rock near the town, but there is now only one small circular tower remaining. The church of All Saints is in ruins, having been destroyed during the parliamentary war. St. Giles' church is a neat modern building. The streets of the town are clean and spacious, and the houses large and well built. It is well lighted with gas, and supplied with water. In the neighbourhood there are several extensive garden and nursery grounds. There is a considerable trade in malt and corn, but there are no manufactures. St. Oswald's Cross, where the market was held, was pulled down in 1735, and a handsome dome, with a Doric colonnade, erected in its place. The borough was first enfranchised by Roger de Lacy, constable of Chester, in the reign of Richard I. Under the municipal act, the borough is governed by four aldermen and twelve councillors; a court of quarter sessions has also been appointed. The Court of the Honour of Pontefract has jurisdiction in cases of debt not exceeding £15. The borough gaol forms a portion of the basement of the town-hall. The borough returns two members to parliament. The Independents, Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists, Quakers, and Roman Catholics, have places of worship here. There are several endowed schools, one of which has an income of £89. 16s.; Perfect's hospital, and Beadhouse hospital, have an annual income of £58. 4s.; St. Nicholas' hospital, £38; Knolles' almshouses, £112; Thwaite's hospital, £12; Cowper's, £9; Frank's, £11. 10s.; R. Frank's, £17. 10s.; Watkinson's, £87. 16s. 6d. There are other charities which produce about £133 per annum. Dr. Bramhall who was appointed Primate of Ireland after the Restoration, was a native of this town. Pontefract gives the title of earl to the Fermor family. Rail. through Southampton to Poole: from Derby, through Rugby, Oxford, and Reading, to Poole, 223 miles. —Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7 a.m. and 5 p.m.: post closes 9.35 p.m. and 9½ a.m. —This town, which derives its name from its situation on a peninsula at the north of a commodious harbour, although it had existed from a period prior to the Conquest, was not of much importance until the time of Edward III., when the port furnished four ships and ninety-four men for the siege of Calais. It received several privileges from successive sovereigns, and was much frequented by Spanish merchants, until the war with Spain in the time of Elizabeth. It soon, however, recovered this temporary check, and continued to increase in trade and importance. In 1483, the Earl of Richmond, on his expedition from St. Malo's, was driven near this port by a storm; and Richard III. endeavoured to induce him to land by means of false signals, but the earl sailed back to France. £30 was levied upon Poole as ship-money. During the parliamentary war the town was held by the parliament; and, on the restoration, Charles II. caused the small fortifications to be dismantled. Poole contains several streets, consisting of neat and commodious houses; they are well paved, lighted, and supplied with water. The church is an elegant modern structure, and there is also an episcopalian chapel. The town-house is a neat and commodious structure. The harbour is safe, and vessels may anchor here during the most severe gales. The quays are nearly a mile long, and there are several spacious warehouses. The principal foreign trade was formerly with Newfoundland, but it is now become more general with all countries, and consists of furs, skins, oil, timber, flax, tar, hides, wine, and fruit. The exports are articles of British manufacture. Sailcloth, nets, and cordage, are the chief manufactures. Under the municipal act the borough is divided into two wards, and is governed by a town council, consisting of a mayor, six aldermen, and eighteen councillors; the mayor, a sheriff, justices of the peace, a coroner, two auditors, four assessors, a treasurer, and town-clerk. The borough returns two members to parliament. The guild-hall is an extensive structure. There are places of worship for the Independents, Baptists, Presbyterians, Unitarians, Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists, and Roman Catholics. A free school here is endowed with £20 per annum, and there are a few endowed almshouses. The poor-law commissioners have erected a workhouse with accommodation for 200 persons, for the union of Poole, which comprises eight parishes, extending over 38 square miles, with a population of about 12,500. Poole was the birth-place of Sir Peter Thompson, an eminent antiquary; and also of John Lewis, an eminent divine and antiquary. —The living (St. James) is a perpetual curacy in the diocese of Sarum: pres. net income, £307: patron, J. PORLOCK (or PORTLOCK), SOMERSET, a parish, small seaport, and market-town, in Carhampton hun^d, union of Williton, on the Bristol Channel: 179 miles from London (coach road 168), 6 from Minehead. Gt. West. Rail. through Bristol to Bridgewater, thence 28 miles: from Derby, through Birmingham, Bristol, &c., 193 miles. Money orders issued at Taunton: London letters deliv^d 9 a.m.: post closes 3½ p.m. This town contains only a few houses, but is agreeably situated between steep and lofty hills. It is of great antiquity, having been a royal residence of the Saxons until it was burnt down by the Danes. The chief trade is the importation of coal and lime from Wales, but in exchange for cattle and corn shipped from this coast for the supply of the mining population on the opposite shore. The bay affords an anchorage for vessels of 250 tons, with good holding ground, and shelter from all gales from north-west, west, and south-west. The harbour, which is dry at half-tide, is small, indifferent, and fast filling up, owing to the constant drifting into it of shingle from the westward. This might be remedied by the extension of the pier, should the place ever acquire sufficient importance to fortify such an outlay. But the access by land is tedious, and the mountainous nature of the surrounding country renders communications in all directions difficult for wheel-carriages. Many of the inhabitants are employed in the salmon and herring fishery. The charities produce about £40 per annum. The living (St. Dubritius), a rectory in the archd^r of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells, is valued at £18. 11s. 8d.: pres. net income, £360: patron, Lord Chancellor: pres. incumbent, Silvanus Brown, 1838: contains 7,850 acres: 155 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 892: ass^d prop^r £1,495: poor rates in 1848, £166. 4s. Market day, Thursday. Fairs: Thursday before May 12, Oct. 9, and Nov. 12. Ashley Coombe, in this parish, is one of the seats of the Earl of Lovelace. The house resembles, in style and position, an Italian convent on the skirts of the Appennines. It stands on a spacious lawn, 200 feet above the sea, artificially excavated on the side of a wooded hill, rising steeply from the shores of the bay; and, though itself embosomed in the forests of oak and pine, it commands from its elevation an uninterrupted prospect of thirty miles up the channel, including the Holmes, Pennarth-point, Breese-down, at the distant outlines of the Mendips.

PORTBURY, SOMERSET, a parish in the hun^d of Portbury, union of Bedminster, south-west of the Avon: 125 miles from London, 7 from Bristol, 16 from Axbridge. Gt. West. Rail. to Bristol, thence 7 miles: from Derby, through Birmingham to Bristol, &c., 139 miles. Money orders issued at Bristol: London letters deliv^d 9 a.m.: post closes 7½ p.m. The charities produce about £6. 10s. per annum. The living (St. Mary), a disch^d vicarage, with that of Tickenham, in the archd^r of Bath, and diocese of Bath and Wells, is valued at £10. 11s. 3d.: pres. net income, £379: patron, Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol: pres. incumbent, C. Newsam, 1803: contains 8,310 acres: 109 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 647: ass^d prop^r £6,252: poor rates in 1848, £201. Fair, Whit-Monday, for cattle and sheep.

Rail. through Southampton to Dorchester, thence 14 miles: from Derby, through Rugby, Oxford, and Reading, to Dorchester, &c., 244 miles. — Money orders issued at Dorchester: London letters deliv^d. 11½ a.m.: post closes 5 p.m. — This peninsula, which takes its name from Porth, a Saxon pirate, who occupied it in the sixth century, is connected with the main land by the Chesil bank, a ridge of shingle, ten miles long, and about twelve feet high. It is opposite to Weymouth, and its length is about four and a half miles, and its breadth two miles. There are two light-houses at the south of the Chisel bank, and near them there is a curious cave, from which rises a kind of natural fountain. In this parish are situated the famous Portland stone quarries, in which about 500 hands are employed, and from which St. Paul's Cathedral, Westminster Abbey, and many other public edifices have been built. The Independents and the Wesleyan Methodists have places of worship here. There are a great many excellent springs of water in different parts of the island. A castle was erected here by William Rufus, which, during the parliamentary wars, was garrisoned by the royalists; some ruins of it still exist. Henry VIII., also built a small fortification here. This place gives the title of duke to the family of Bentinck. — The living (St. George), a rectory in the diocese of Sarum, is valued at £18. 2s. 1d.: pres. net income, £158: patron, Bishop of Winchester: pres. incumbent, David Hogarth, 1838: contains 2,970 acres: 546 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 2,852: probable popⁿ in 1849, 3,279: ass^d. prop^r. £1,829: poor rates in 1848, £809. 13s. Tithes commuted in 1839. — Inns: Castle, Portland Arms, and New Hotel. — Portland Castle, the seat of John Spencer Manning, Esq., is an ancient fortified structure, standing at the foot of the loftiest part of the island. It sustained many sieges from the time of its erection to the end of the parliamentary war, and was granted to the Rev. John Manning by the Duke of York. He died in 1826, and was succeeded jointly by his two sons, John Spencer, late a captain in the 1st, or King's Dragoon Guards, and Charles Augustus Manning, captain, deputy-lieutenant, and resident magistrate for Portland.

PORTSEA, HANTS, an inland parish and town on the coast of Hampshire: the island comprehends the parishes and towns of Portsmouth and Portsea, a small part of Wymering, and an extra-parochial tract, running along the margin of Langstone harbour: 96 miles from London (coach road 72), 1 from Portsmouth. — Brighton and Sou. Coast Rail. to Portsmouth, thence 1 mile: from Derby, through London, &c., 228 miles. — Money orders issued at Portsmouth: London letters deliv^d 7 a.m. and 4 p.m.: post closes 7½ a.m., 11½ a.m., and 11 p.m. — On the north of the island there are the extensive military works, called the "Lines;" on the south-east is Cumberland Fort; on the south is South Sea Castle and several batteries; on the west the powerful fortifications of Portsea and Portsmouth. Three bridges connect it with the main land. The town of Portsea is situated on the harbour of Portsmouth, to the north of the town, and consists chiefly of two parts, the walled and the suburban, the former of which is separated from Portsmouth by a creek. The fortifications are very complete. The naval dock-yard occupies the greater part of the area within the walls. Queen Street, about half a mile long, is the principal street. The dock-yard, which is about 2,000 feet in breadth, extends over about 100 acres, and contains a house for the port-admiral, another for the commissioner, and residences for its officers, the Royal Naval Academy, and store-houses and work-shops for nearly every article required in ship-building.

The sea wharf wall is about 3,500 feet in length. The great basin is 380 feet long, 260 broad, and 2½ acres in extent; it has six dry docks belonging to it, together with a double dock for frigates, and several building slips, all containing accommodation for the largest vessels. There is a small chapel, in the cupola of which is the bell of the Royal George. About 2,000 workmen are constantly employed here. There are places of worship for the Independents, Baptists, Wesleyan Methodists, Bible Christians, and Roman Catholics. The charities produce about £71 per annum, besides which a bequest of £10,000 was made in 1821 by Mr. Thomas Fitzherbert, for the benefit of the poor. — The living is valued at £12: contains 4,980 acres, including Portsea Guildable: 8,215 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 43,704: ass^d prop^y £100,725: poor rates in 1848, £13,980. 16s. Hoper, 1815: contains 2,780 acres: 87 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 678: ass^d prop^y £2,043.

PORTSMOUTH, HANTS, a seaport, borough, and market town in Portsdown hun^d and division, union of Portsea Island: 92 miles from London (coach road 72), 21 from Southampton. — Brighton and Sou. Coast Rail. to Portsmouth station: from Derby, through London, &c., 227 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7 a.m. and 4 p.m.: post closes 11½ a.m. and 10 p.m. — This town, which is situated upon a natural sheltered bay, forming a magnificent harbour, is said by Camden to owe its foundation to the inhabitants of Porchester, which stands at the top of the harbour, who, having found that the sea was receding considerably from that town, removed to the island of Portsea, and built Portsmouth. As far back as the reign of Henry III., a dock-yard, in some way connected with government, existed here. The fortifications were commenced in the reign of Edward IV., and concluded in that of Richard III.; and in the time of Henry VIII. it had become the principal naval arsenal in England. In the reign of Edward VI., the whole of the navy of England consisted only of 53 vessels, with 7,780 seamen, soldiers, marines, and gunners. All these vessels, except three, were stationed at Portsmouth. £60 was levied upon this place by Charles I., as ship-money. During the parliamentary wars, the town sided with the parliament. Since 1771, the fortifications have been much increased and improved. They are now of great strength, and entirely surround the town, forming a handsome curved terrace, planted with elms, and commanding a fine sea view. The principal street is the High Street, which is three furlongs in length. Contiguous to the western suburb, there is a natural bay, with a quay, &c., for the use of merchant vessels. The eastern suburb adjoins Portsea, and contains the commodious and elegant mansion of the lieutenant-governor, and spacious marine and military barracks. The garrison chapel stands on the site of the old government house. The town-hall is a modern erection. The church is an ancient building, with a modern tower, 120 feet in height, which forms an excellent land-mark. At the bottom of the High Street is the Victoria pier, principally used by the steam-packets to and from the Isle of Wight and Southampton. There is a floating bridge communicating with Gosport. The harbour of Portsmouth is about $\frac{1}{2}$ of a mile in width at one part of its entrance, and its extreme breadth is 6 miles, whilst its length is $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles: thus it forms the most spacious, and at the same time most secure harbour in the kingdom. There are several headlands and creeks round the outside of it, and it is so well sheltered that vessels which have entered it do not feel the effect of even the most violent storms. There is no accumulation of sand, as the ebb is much stronger than the flood tide. In low water spring tides the depth of the mouth of the channel is only 12 $\frac{1}{2}$ feet, but the Camber has been recently considerably deepened by the corporation. The coasting trade of Portsmouth is very extensive, and it is a bonding-warehouse port for all goods except tobacco. Steamers ply at certain times to Southampton and the Isle of Wight, to Plymouth, Falmouth, and Havre de Grace. The Arundel and Portsea Canal, which commences in the suburbs, runs in an easterly direction to a creek near the mouth of Langstone harbour. As many as 20 charters have been granted to this town by various monarchs, commencing with Richard I., and ending with Charles II. Under the municipal act, the borough is divided into six wards, and has a town council consisting of 14 aldermen and 42 councillors. A commission of the peace has been granted, and a court of quarter sessions appointed. The town is well watched, paved, and lighted, under local acts. The borough returns two members to parliament. There are places of worship for the Baptists, Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, Presbyterians, and Unitarians. In 1732, Dr. Smith founded a free school for 20 boys, supported by funds produced from lands in the Isle of Wight.

There is also an almshouse for eight poor widows, a penitentiary, a marine society, and several charitable bequests for the relief of the poor. The living is valued at £6. 13s. 4d.: popⁿ in 1841, 9,354: probable popⁿ in 1849, 10,756. Market days, Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 7 a.m. and 6 p.m.: post closes 7½ p.m. and 10 p.m. This town derives its name, Priests' town, from the number of religious institutions that anciently existed here. It owes its origin to the ruins of the ancient city of Ribchester. £40 was levied upon this place as ship-money by Charles I. Every twentieth year there is a jubilee held here called Preston Guild, which begins on the last week in August, and continues for a month; the last one was held in 1842. The town is handsome and well built, the houses are in general respectable, and the streets well paved and lighted with gas. In the neighbourhood are several agreeable walks. The borough of Preston is prescriptive, but has had charters granted it from various sovereigns. Under the New Municipal Act it is divided into six wards, and governed by twelve aldermen and thirty-six councillors: it has a commission of the peace. There is a court of pleas held every three weeks.

The county House of Correction is a large fortified building. Preston returns two members to parliament. The chief manufacture is that of Manchester cotton, in which several mills are engaged, and a large number of the inhabitants employed; but there are also some flax mills. The principal commerce of the port is in the coasting trade. There is a neat custom-house; and also a commodious market place. The Independents, Baptists, Presbyterians, Methodists, Huntingdonians, Quakers, and Roman Catholics, have places of worship here. There are a few endowed schools, together with a number of almshouses and benefit and other charitable societies. The charities derived from endowments produce about £400 per annum. Sir Richard Arkwright was born here in 1732, and although brought up as a barber, eventually realised a large fortune by his useful inventions of machinery, which have greatly increased our cotton manufactures. He died in 1792. — Contains 14,230 acres: 6,712 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 53,482: ass^d prop^r £59,744: poor rates in 1848, £9,346. 16s. — Market day, Saturday. Raby Castle is the seat of Henry Vane, K.G., Duke and Marquis of Cleveland, Earl of Darlington, Viscount and Baron Barnard of Barnard Castle, and Baron Raby of Raby Castle, colonel in the army, and colonel of the Durham militia. This magnificent old mansion occupies a rising ground upon the east of an extensive park. It was principally erected by John de Nevil, Earl of Westmoreland, in 1379, although some portions of it are more ancient, and others more modern, than that date. In 1584, Charles, the sixth and last earl of Westmoreland, having engaged in a conspiracy against Elizabeth, was obliged to fly the country, when his estates were sold by the crown, and an ancestor of the family of Vane became the purchaser. There are two entrances to the castle flanked with towers. There are also several embattled towers in various parts of the building, the whole exterior of which presents a most imposing appearance. The interior contains several vast apartments, one of which is 90 feet long, 36 high, and 34 broad. All these, together with the smaller ones, are fitted up most elegantly and luxuriously. The parks, pleasure-grounds, and plantations, are in the same style of grandeur and beauty as the castle. The family of the Duke of Cleveland derives its descent from Sir Henry Vane, who was knighted for his gallantry at Poitiers. From him descended Sir Henry, of Raby Castle, a distinguished politician, who filled many high offices under James I. and Charles I., but lost the favour of the latter monarch by his activity in the prosecution of the Earl of Strafford, who had been created Baron Raby of Raby Castle, to which dignity he considered himself entitled. He then became a zealous parliamentarian. His son, Sir Henry, after having held the office of treasurer of the navy, which he relinquished, as he thought the fees of it, about £39,000 per annum, were too much for a subject, joined the cause of the republicans, and, after the Restoration, was arraigned for high treason, and beheaded on Tower Hill in 1662. His son, Sir Christopher, was raised to the peerage as Lord Barnard. His grandson, Henry, having filled some high offices, was created Viscount Barnard and Earl of Darlington, in 1754. The third earl, William Henry, was, in 1827, created Marquis, and, in 1833, Duke of Cleveland. His Grace died in 1842, when the honours devolved upon his son, the present duke.

This gentleman traces his descent from Henry de Ferrars, a powerful Norman baron, to whom the Conqueror granted 114 manors in the county of Derby alone, besides other possessions. His son was created, by King Stephen, Earl of Derby. Walcheline, the second son of the third earl, was the grandfather of Margery, who, in the time of Henry III., married Sir John Chandos, Knt. Their great-grandson, Sir John Chandos of Radborne, was one of the original knights of the garter, and one of the most distinguished warriors of the age of chivalry in which he lived, taking part in the battles of Cressy and Poitiers, and the subsequent expeditions to France and Spain of Edward III. and his son, the Black Prince. In 1369, this gallant warrior fell in a skirmish at the bridge of Lusac, in Gascoigne, regretted by both French and English. He left no sons, but his sister, Alianore, married Sir John Lawton, Knt., squire to Sir John Chandos. Their only daughter, Elizabeth Lawton of Radborne, married Sir Peter de la Pole, M.P. for Derbyshire, the representative of an ancient Staffordshire family; and their son, Ralph, an eminent lawyer, was appointed a judge of the Court of King's Bench in 1452. From him descended Edward Sacheverell Pole, Esq., colonel in the army, who distinguished himself at Fontenoy and Culloden, and throughout the seven years war. His son, Sacheverell Pole, Esq., in 1807, assumed, by sign manual, the additional surname and arms of Chandos, and, dying in 1813, was succeeded by his son, the present representative of the family.

Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7 a.m. and 4 p.m.: post closes 8½ a.m. and 2.40 p.m. The town is delightfully situated upon the declivity of a hill, looking southward to the sea, and commanding some beautiful views both landward and seaward, the latter, in clear weather, embracing the French coast. The town consists of several well-paved and well-lighted streets, and contains several handsome buildings. It is much frequented during the summer and autumn season by visitors from London, who arrive by the daily steam-packets to enjoy the sea-bathing, for which one portion of the sands, to the south of the pier, is peculiarly adapted. There are several bathing establishments fitted up in a most commodious and even elegant manner, and several lodging-houses. Cavendish chapel, erected in 1840, is a handsome edifice. The assembly-room is a neat building, well adapted to the purposes for which it is used. There are extensive barracks for cavalry and infantry, and two batteries have been erected to defend the harbour. The town is quite modern, having been of comparative insignificance until of late years, when it became a fashionable watering-place. There was a small trade to Russia in the seventeenth century. In 1821, George IV., on visiting Hanover, embarked at Ramsgate, and an obelisk has been erected to commemorate the circumstance. The principal object of interest in Ramsgate is the pier, a magnificent structure for the accommodation of merchant vessels. The entrance to the harbour is 200 feet wide, and ships of 300 tons can enter it at all times, and are safe in it during the worst storms. On the west pier is a lighthouse. There is a commodious and spacious dry dock, with store-houses, and everything required for repairing vessels. A small coasting trade is carried on. Ramsgate is governed by a deputy appointed by the mayor of Sandwich, who acts as constable. There is a court of requests held the second Tuesday in every month. The Independents, Baptists, Methodists, and Jews, have places of worship here. The charities amount to about £77 per annum. The living is valued at £7: contains 260 acres: 1,354 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 10,909: probable popⁿ in 1849, 12,545: ass^d prop^r £14,080: poor rates in 1848, £1,782. 2s. Market days, Wednesday

Ravensingham Hall, a large and well-built brick mansion, standing in an extensive and well-wooded park, is the seat of Sir Edmund Bacon, Bart., of Redgrave (premier baronet of England), and of Mildenhall, both in Suffolk. The family of Bacon is of very great antiquity, and one of its most celebrated members was the famous Friar Bacon. Another renowned member of this family was Sir Nicholas Bacon, Knt., an eminent lawyer, who, in 1510, at the accession of Elizabeth, was appointed keeper of the great seal, and sworn of the privy council. This great statesman was mainly instrumental in promoting that prosperity and glory of the country which so eminently distinguished the reign of Elizabeth. He latterly became so corpulent, that the Queen used to observe that "the lord keeper's soul lodged well." His second son, by his second marriage, was Francis, who, having obtained great eminence at the bar, and filled the office of attorney-general, in 1617 was appointed lord keeper of the great seal, and, in the following year, lord high chancellor of England. He was subsequently created Baron Verulam, and Viscount St. Albans; but having been convicted, on his own confession, of corruption in his high office, he went into retirement, and devoted his splendid talents to those literary and philosophical labours which will always be looked on with wonder and admiration. "Alas!" says Walpole, "that he, who could command immortal fame, should have stooped to the little ambition of power." The lord keeper, Sir Nicholas, was succeeded by his eldest son, Sir Nicholas, who was knighted by Elizabeth in 1578, and was the first person created a baronet on the institution of that order, on May 22, 1611. The sixth baronet, Sir Edmund, M.P. for Norfolk, dying without male issue, the baronetcy devolved on his kinsman, Sir Richard, who also inherited the Mildenhall baronetcy from Sir Butts, third son of the first Sir Nicholas of Redgrave. Sir Richard also dying without male issue, the honours devolved on his nephew, Sir Edmund, who died in 1820, and was succeeded by his son, the present baronet.

The grounds command some picturesque views, and at one part of them there is a fine forest of oaks. The manor and castle were purchased by Thomas de Liddell, an alderman of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, in the reign of James I. His grandson, Thomas, was created a baronet by Charles I. in 1642, for his gallant defence of Newcastle for that monarch against the Scots. His descendant, Sir Henry, M.P., was raised to the peerage in 1747, as Baron Ravensworth, but dying in 1784 without male issue, the barony expired, while the baronetcy devolved on his nephew, Sir Henry George, well known for his somewhat romantic disposition. In consequence of a wager, he made an excursion to Lapland, and returned with two native girls and some rein-deers. He died in 1791, and was succeeded by his son, Sir Thomas Henry, the present representative of the family, who was created Baron Ravensworth, of Ravensworth Castle, in 1821.

READING, BERKSHIRE, a borough, county, and market town in the hun^d and union of Reading: 35½ miles from London (coach road 39), 13 from Maidenhead. — Gt. West. Rail. to Reading station: from Derby, through Rugby and Oxford to Reading, &c., 122 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7 a.m. and 1 p.m.: post closes 10.55 a.m. and 10 p.m. — Reading, which is supposed by Camden to derive its name from the British word Redys, signifying fern, with which the soil formerly abounded, is pleasantly situated upon the two banks of the river Kennet, across which there are bridges connecting the various parts of the town. It is a place of great antiquity, though its exact origin is unknown. As early as 871 it is spoken of as a fortified town, which had been taken by the Danes from the Saxons. They continued in the possession of it till the reign of Sweyn, by whom it was burnt to the ground, together with a monastery which had been founded here by Elfrida. It once possessed two castles, one of which was founded by Stephen, and the other stood upon the site of a magnificent abbey, which Henry I. founded about 1121, and in which he was buried. In 1163, Stephen presided at a judicial combat, which took place here between Henry de Essex, the royal standard-bearer, and Robert de Montford, in which the former was vanquished. Several councils were held by various monarchs, and the parliament frequently removed here from London, when the plague was raging in the metropolis. Charles I. levied £220 upon this place, for ship-money. In 1642 the town was garrisoned by the parliament, but was taken by the royalists, who held it until the Earl of Essex forced the governor, Sir Arthur Ashton, to surrender, upon rather unfavourable terms, for which he was afterwards tried by a court-martial. In 1644, the king, before his departure from Oxford, demolished the fortifications. In 1688 a skirmish took place in Reading, between the Dutch troops of the Prince of Orange, and some Irish soldiers of James II., in which the only man who lost his life in that expedition was killed. The town consists of several neat streets, intersected by branches of the Kennett, and well paved and lighted with gas. The houses, which are chiefly of brick, are handsome and commodious. The church of St. Lawrence was rebuilt in 1434. St. Mary's church is still more ancient, as it is said to have been the first established in this part of the country after the introduction of Christianity. St. John's church is a handsome Gothic structure, erected in 1837, by the Rev. N. Trench. In the centre of the town is a commodious market-place. The Forberg, now used as a promenade by the inhabitants, is an extensive and handsome outwork, to the north-east of the town, commanding a fine prospect. It is contained within the circuit of the outer wall of Henry I.'s splendid abbey, which appears to have been half a mile in circumference: the fragments of the walls are eight feet in thickness. The county gaol, a spacious building, has been erected upon its site. The town-hall, rebuilt in 1785, contains a splendid room, one hundred feet in length, besides a separate council-chamber. There are several literary, philosophical, and other institutions of a similar nature in Reading. This borough claims prescription, but it had a charter granted to it by Henry III., which was confirmed by several other monarchs. Under the Municipal Act the borough is divided into three wards, and governed by six aldermen and eighteen councillors. A commission of the peace has been granted, and a court of quarter sessions appointed. The borough returns two members to parliament; the mayor is the returning officer. The trade of this town is considerable, as there is communication by water with London, Bath, and Bristol. The exports consist of the produce of the neighbouring county, and the imports of articles of consumption. A large quantity of flour is ground here. There are also iron-foundries, breweries, yards for barge and boat building, silk and velvet manufactories, &c. The Independents, Baptists, Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists, Quakers, and Roman Catholics, have places of worship. There is a grammar-school, founded by Henry VII., and now endowed with £50 per annum, and two scholarships at Oxford. The blue-coat school, founded in 1646, for the education and maintenance of 47 boys, is a handsome building, with a revenue of £1,000 a year. There are some other endowed schools. The other principal charities are the almshouses for 40 old men and women; Sir Thomas White's charity for eleven loans of £50 each, without interest, for ten years; another loan charity of £150; charities from £3 to £30 as prizes for poor maidens on their marriage; besides other charities for apprenticeship, &c. The Oracle, founded by John Kendrick, is a strong house of brick to set the poor at work in, rent free, at the woollen manufacture, but it ultimately caused the ruin of that trade in Reading, and itself fell to decay; some of the extensive workshops are still occupied by poor people, rent free. The whole of the Reading charities amount annually to upwards of £2,800. The Reading poor-law union comprises three parishes, extending over eight square miles. This was the birthplace of William of Reading, Archbishop of Bordeaux, in the reign of Henry III.; and of William Laud, Archbishop of Canterbury, the well-known and unfortunate minister of Charles II.; he was born in 1573, and rapidly rose to the highest offices in the church, and had great influence over Charles I.; but at the commencement of the long parliament a bill of attainder was passed against him, and he was executed on Tower Hill, January 10, 1644-5. He wrote several works displaying great erudition.---Contains 2,080 acres: 3,081 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 18,937: ass^d prop^y £36,665: poor rates in 1848, £7,320. 7s.---Market day, Saturday. He was a faithful adherent of Charles II., who, on the Restoration, swore him a member of the privy council, and constituted him one of the lords of the Treasury. He contributed £13,000 towards the military hospital at Chelsea. His eldest son Stephen was raised to the peerage in 1741, as Lord Ilchester of Ilchester, in Somerset, and Baron Strangways of Strangways, in Dorset, and was subsequently created Lord Ilchester and Stavordale, Baron of Redlynch, in Somerset, with remainder to the heirs male of his brother Henry. In 1756 his lordship was raised to the Earldom of Ilchester, with the same remainder, and on his marriage he assumed the name of Strangways, in right of his wife, the representative of that ancient family. His grandson, the present peer, Henry Stephen Fox Strangways, D.C.L., lord-lieutenant of Somerset, succeeded his father as third Earl in 1802.

The Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists have chapels here. The charities produce about £27 per annum. Reepham was the birth-place of Richard Westall, the royal academician, whose beautiful designs first gave the impulse in consequence of which all our beautifully illustrated books have been produced. He was born in 1765, and was first apprenticed to an engraver in heraldry on silver; but his spirit could not brook so low a department of the arts, and having been a laborious student at the Royal Academy, in 1786

he commenced his splendid career as an artist. Shortly afterwards he formed a friendship with Mr. subsequently Sir Thomas Lawrence, which continued through life. Mr. Westall painted many historical pictures, and attained to great eminence as a designer, exhibiting in all his works wonderful taste and judgment. He enjoyed royal patronage, his last occupation being the giving lessons in drawing to her present majesty Queen Victoria. He died in 1836, aged 71. — The living (Virgin Mary), a disch^d rectory, with that of Kerdiston, in the archd^y of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, is valued at £18. 1s. ¾d.: contains 570 acres: 40 houses: ass^d prop^y £2,936: poor rates in 1848, £542. 6s. — Market day, Saturday. It chiefly consists of two streets, lighted with gas, and well paved. In the neighbourhood there is some fine fuller's earth and freestone. The church is a fine Gothic building, consisting of a nave, chancel, and two aisles, and containing some interesting monuments. There is a neat town-hall. The government of the town is vested in a bailiff and some inferior officers, who are chosen annually at the manor court. The quarter sessions are held here. Above the town there is a smooth well-trimmed grass plot, commanding some picturesque views. There is a curious cavern here. A castle anciently stood here, which was taken from William de Warenne by Louis the Dauphin, in the reign of John. The manor, which was originally very extensive, belonged to Edith, the queen of Edward the Confessor. Reigate now returns one member to parliament; before the passing of the Reform Act it returned two. There are places of worship for the Independents and the Quakers. The endowed grammar-school was founded in 1675. There are other charities, producing about £200 per annum. Its style is Gothic, it is of great extent, and is surrounded by a noble park. It stands on the supposed site of the palace of Rendilus—became the property of the Spencers in the time of Edward VI., and continued theirs till it was vested in James, the fifth Duke of Hamilton, by his marriage with Elizabeth, daughter and heiress of Edward Spencer, and here the duchess resided after the Duke's decease: it was afterwards bought by Sir George Wombwell, who sold it to J. P. Thellusson, Esq., who was subsequently created Baron Rendlesham, in the peerage of Ireland, and was the grandfather of the present noble owner of the mansion. His lordship's family derive their descent from the ancient noblesse of France, one of whom, Peter Thellusson, Esq., son of Isaac de Thellusson, ambassador from Geneva to Louis XV., settled in this country, and during the last century accumulated a large fortune as a merchant. After bequeathing large fortunes to each member of his family, that gentleman devised certain landed estates, worth about £4,500 a year, and personal property to the amount of £600,000, to trustees, for the purpose of accumulation during the lives of his three sons, and such sons of theirs as should be living at the time of their death.

The whole amount is then to be laid out in the purchase of estates, which are to be conveyed to the male representative of his three sons, with the benefit of survivorship. It is supposed that the property will at that time amount to £1,500,000.

Edward I. made it a free borough, and it is contributory to Flint in sending a member to parliament. It formerly possessed a noble castle, of which several walls are still in existence. The Dean of St. Asaph has placed a tablet with the following inscription upon part of an old wall in the town, now forming the gable end of a row of small houses:

This Fragment
Is the Remains of the Building
Where King Edward the First Held his Parliament,
A.D. 1283:
In which passed the statute of Rhuddlan, Securing
To the Principality of Wales
Its Judicial Right
And Independence.

It principally consists of one long street. To the north of the town there is a race-course. The trade is at present almost entirely confined to Irish linens, but the district is chiefly agricultural. There is a large and commodious building used as the county court. Henry VII. incorporated this borough; but under the Municipal Act the government is at present vested in four aldermen and twelve councillors. A lordship court was established here in 1284. The assizes for the county are held here, as are also the quarter sessions, alternately with Denbigh, to which town Ruthin is contributory in returning one member to parliament. The county gaol and house of correction is a spacious building on the outskirts of the town. There are places of worship here for the Independents, Calvinistic Methodists, Baptists, Wesleyan Methodists, and Quakers. There is an endowed grammar-school, founded by Dr. Goodman, and possessing six exhibitions to the universities. Dr. Goodman, in 1590, also founded and endowed Christ's hospital for a warden and twelve poor persons; by subsequent benefactions, the income has been increased to about £520 per annum. There are other charities, producing about £200 per annum. The Ruthin poor-law union comprises 21 parishes, with a population of about 17,000. — The living (St. Peter) is a rectory, with that of Llanrhydd, in the diocese of Bangor: pres. net income, £263: patron, Dean and Chapter of Westminster: pres. incumbent, R. Rail. to Richmond station: from Derby, through London, &c., 144 miles.---4 posts each way daily.---The village is beautifully situated upon the banks of the Thames, across which there is an elegant stone bridge of three semicircular arches. It was anciently called Sheem, signifying shining or splendour, from the great beauty of its scenery. When Henry VII. rebuilt the palace here, upon the site of one erected by Edward III., which had been burnt down, it took the name of Richmond from that monarch's title of Earl of Richmond, in Yorkshire. This palace was, for a long time, the favourite residence of the sovereigns of this country; but it was demolished soon after the Restoration, and a gateway is now all that remains of it. The site is occupied by private houses held from the Crown. The village consists of three principal streets; the houses are well built, and the shops are very respectable and handsome. The theatre is a plain brick building, erected in 1766 by Mrs. Horne. There is a very commodious observatory here, erected by George III. in 1768, and furnished with every kind of astronomical instruments. At the summit of the town is Richmond Hill, so justly celebrated for the beautiful and picturesque scenery which it commands, "where radiant summer opens all its pride." The extensive park, the walls surrounding which are eight miles in circuit, contains numerous beautiful romantic walks and drives. It was originally formed by Edward I. The ranger-ship of this park is an office of great trust and emolument. The church contains several most interesting monuments, one of them to the memory of the poet Thomson, and another to the celebrated Edmund Kean; both of whom died and are buried here. There is also a monument to Gilbert Wakefield. There are places of worship for the Independents, Baptists, Wesleyan and Calvinistic Methodists, and Roman Catholics. The national school is endowed with £155 per annum. Bishop Duppa erected almshouses for ten poor women in 1661, which have now an income of £207. In 1606 Sir George Wright founded almshouses for eight poor persons: they have now an income of £132. H. Michell, in 1695, founded and rebuilt almshouses for ten poor men; which have now £425 per annum. Mrs. Houlton, in 1757, founded almshouses for nine poor women; which have now an income of about £220. There are other charities which produce about £1,360 per annum, of which £612 are applied to parochial purposes. The Richmond poor-law union comprises five parishes, extending over eight square miles, with a population of about 13,000. An extensive building has been lately erected here for the purposes of the Wesleyan Theological Institution. Henry V., in 1414, founded and richly endowed a convent of Carthusians at this place, at which Perkin Warbeck at one time found an asylum, and to which the body of James IV. of Scotland was brought after the battle of Flodden Field; it was entirely suppressed on the death of Queen Mary.---The living (St. Mary Magdalene) is a vicarage, with the perpetual curacy of St. John's, in the diocese of Winchester: pres. net income, £250: patron, Vicar of Kingston: pres. incumbent, J. It was founded by Alan Rufus, the nephew of the Conqueror, and first Earl of Richmond, and was formerly surrounded by walls and strongly fortified. There was also an extensive and strong castle on the south of the town, overhanging the Swale, also founded by Alan Rufus, of which only a few ruins now remain. The streets are well built, well paved, and lighted with gas. The church has a fine organ, and contains several interesting monuments. The town-hall is a large and elegant structure, which is sometimes used for assemblies and balls. There are race-courses on the north of the town. The manufactures are inconsiderable. In 1690, a Frenchman established a small print-ground. Aislebeck spring supplies the town with water. Charles I. levied £50 upon this place as ship-money. The borough was first enfranchised by Alan Niger, the second Earl of Richmond. Under the municipal act, the government is vested in four aldermen and twelve councillors; a commission of the peace has been granted, and quarter sessions are held here. The debtors' gaol and the borough gaol are large and commodious buildings. The borough, with the parishes of Richmond and Easely, returns two members to parliament; and it is one of the polling-places for the north riding. The Independents, Baptists, Wesleyan Methodists, Quakers, and Roman Catholics, have places of worship here. The free grammar-school, founded and endowed by burgesses in the time of Queen Elizabeth, contains from thirty to forty-five boys, and has a yearly income of about £300. There are three hospitals with small endowments, besides other charities which produce about £100 per annum. The Richmond poor-law union comprises 46 parishes, extending over 169 square miles, with a population of about 18,000. This place gives the title of duke to the Lennox family. — The living (the Virgin Mary), a rectory in the diocese of Ripon, is valued at £15. 5s. 7½d.: pres. net income, £470: patron, Lord Chancellor: pres. incumbent, L. RIPON, WEST RIDING, YORK, a city and borough, the seat of a see, and a parish and market town, in the lower division of Claro wapentake, on the western bank of the river Ure: the parish comprises the chapelries of Bishop-Monckton, Bishop-Thorn-ton, Pateley-Bridge, Sawley, and Skelton; the townships of Aismunderby with Bondgate, High and Low Bishopside, Bishop-ton, Clothholme, Eavestone, Gwindale, Grantley with Skeldin, Hewick-Bridge, Hewick-Copt, Ingerthorpe, Markington with Wallerthwaite, Marston with Moseby, Newby with Mulwith, Nunwick with Howgrave, Sharrow, North Stainley with Lenningsford, Sutton-Grange, Warsill, Westwick, and Whitcliffe with Thorpe, within Ripon liberty; and the chapelries of Aldfield and Winksley, and the townships of Bowerley, Dacre, Shelding, Studley-Roger, and Studley-Royal, in the lower division of Claro wapentake: 234 miles from London (coach road 212), 26 from Leeds. — Nor. West. Rail. through Rugby, Derby, and Leeds, to Ripon station: from Derby, through Leeds, &c., 102 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 8½ a.m.: post closes 4.25 p.m. — This is a small city, beautifully situated, rather to the south-west of the Ure, across which there is a handsome stone bridge of fourteen arches. It is built upon the sides of a gentle eminence, and is intersected by the Skell rivulet, which separates it from the south-eastern suburbs. The name is supposed to be taken from the word Ripa, the bank of a river, but it is uncertain whether its origin is British or Roman. In 661, however, the town only consisted of thirty houses, and Eata, abbot of Melrose, founded a monastery here. The town was frequently demolished by the Danes, and also entirely destroyed by the Conqueror in 1069. In the reign of Edward II., it was burned by the Scots under Robert Bruce. Henry IV., with his court, resided here in 1405, while the plague was raging in London. £40 was levied upon it as ship-money. The negotiations between the English and Scotch commissioners commenced here in 1640. Being without any castle, and unfortified, the town was not injured during the ensuing war. The object of the greatest interest in Ripon is its cathedral, a large, venerable, and handsome structure, in the form of a Latin cross. It has three low buttressed and pinnacled towers—one in the centre, and two at the west end. The architecture of the nave is simple, and the vaulted arches of the choir being elaborately ornamented, the effect on the whole is extremely beautiful. The choir is separated from the body of the church by an elegantly carved stone screen, 20 feet high. Above it is the organ, erected in 1833, the elegant case of which was designed by the Blores. The entire length of the building from east to west is 266 feet 5 inches; the breadth of the nave and side aisles, 87 feet; the height of the nave, 88 feet 6 inches; the length of the transept, 132 feet; and the length of the choir, 101 feet. We learn from Tanner, that Alchfrid, king of the Northumbrians, first founded a monastery here, of which St. Wilfrid was made abbot, about 661. It continued to flourish until 950, when it was burnt down by King Edred. It was rebuilt by the archbishops of York, one of whom, Aldred, about the time of the Conquest, endowed it and made it collegiate. There were seven valuable prebends attached to it; and, at the dissolution, the revenues, exclusive of the prebends, were valued altogether at £47. 16s. 3d. King James I. refounded the establishment about 1604, added a dean to the seven prebendaries, and endowed it with £247 per annum. In 1836, the diocese of Ripon was instituted by an order in council, with the consent of the Archbishop of York and the Bishop of Chester, and it is subject to the jurisdiction of the former as metropolitan. The new diocese consists of that part of the county of York previously in the diocese of Chester, the deanery of Craven, and all such parts of the deaneries of Ainsty and Pontefract, in the diocese of York, as are situated west of the Ainsty, and the wapentakes of Barkstone-Ash, Osgoldcross, and Staincross. The archdeaconries of Craven and Richmond have been instituted, the collegiate church made a cathedral, and the town is now therefore a city. The bishop has an average yearly income of £4,500, and he has a handsome palace at North Grange, about a mile north-west of the town. Trinity church is a commodious and elegant Gothic structure. There is a spacious market-place, with a handsome town-hall upon the south side, designed by Wyatt, and erected in 1801, at the expense of Mrs. Allanson of Studley Park. It contains assembly and committee rooms. The streets are narrow and irregular, but well paved and lighted. The borough of Ripon claims prescription, but it was incorporated by James I. Under the Municipal Act the government is vested in four aldermen and twelve councillors; it has a commission of the peace and petty sessions. The lord of the manor holds courts-leet. There is a debtors' gaol here. The borough returns two members to parliament. A considerable spur manufacture was at one time carried on here, and subsequently the manufacture of woollen and cotton. There is an extensive manufacture of saddletrees in the neighbourhood. Barges import coal and merchandise to the town, and export lead, butter, &c. Many of the inhabitants of Ripon consist of wealthy families, who have settled there on account of the beautiful scenery in the vicinity. The Independents and Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists have places of worship. Queen Mary founded and endowed the free grammar-school in 1555, for the sons of the inhabitants, the head master has £180 per annum, and the second master £63 per annum. Jepson's hospital was founded in 1672, for the education and maintenance of ten poor boys. A mechanic's institute has been established. St. Mary Magdalene's hospital was founded by Archbishop Thurstan in the twelfth century, for religious sisters for the relief of lepers; the sisters afterwards gave way to brothers, and, at the dissolution, the establishment had an income of £27. 5s. 6d. The hospital is now inhabited by six poor widows, who have an annual allowance of £3 each. St. John the Baptist's hospital, founded by an archbishop of York in the reign of John, had, at the dissolution, an income of £12. 0s. 4d.; it is now used for the boys' national school. There are several smaller charities producing about £200 per annum, part of which is for schools in the townships. The poor land charities, which are managed by nine trustees, have an income of about £105. A custom formerly existed here of blowing a horn three times at the mayor's door and at the market cross, at nine o'clock in the evening; after which, if any house or shop was robbed during the night, a tax of fourpence was levied upon the housekeepers to reimburse the sufferers. The horn is still blown as of old, but the tax has ceased to be levied. This was the birth-place of Beilby Porteus, Bishop of London in 1787, and celebrated for his great erudition. He wrote several valuable moral and religious works, and died in 1808. Ripon gives the title of earl to the family of Robinson. — The living (Holy Trinity) is a perpetual curacy in the diocese of Ripon: pres. net income, £200: patron, Simeon's Trustees: pres. incumbent, W. It consists of several well-paved and lighted streets; several improvements have been made in it of late years, and there is a good supply of water from reservoirs. The church, a venerable edifice, approached by a flight of steps, stands on an eminence. There is a new market-place and town-hall. Several literary and scientific institutions have been established in the town; and there are assembly and billiard rooms, a neat theatre, &c. The principal manufactures are of cotton and wool, for which there are several factories employing upwards of 20,000 of the inhabitants. Coal, stone, and slate, are found in the neighbourhood; and the canal forms a communication with the eastern and western seas. The parish and town are under the jurisdiction of the county magistrates. Rochdale returns one member to parliament, the returning officer being appointed by the sheriff of the county; it is also a polling-place for the southern division of the county. A court of requests formerly existed in this town. There are places of worship for the Baptists, Independents, Presbyterians, Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists, the members of the New Connexion, the Unitarians, Quakers, and Roman Catholics. The charities, which produce about £720 per annum, are principally applied to educational purposes. The Rochdale poor-law union comprises six parishes. The Danes were defeated near this place with great loss. Several Roman remains have been discovered here. The eccentric John Collier, better known as "Tim Bobbin," resided here for many years as a schoolmaster. Rochdale gives the title of baron to the Byron family.—The living is valued at £11. 4s. 9½d.: contains 58,620 acres: 13,141 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 84,718: ass^d. prop^y £93,253: poor rates in 1848, £8,117. 13s.—Market day, Saturday. ROCHESTER, KENT, an ancient city and seaport, the seat of a see, in Aylesford lathe, union of Medway: 31 miles from London (coach road 30), 8 from Maidstone.—Nor. Kent Rail. to Rochester: from Derby, through London, &c., 163 miles.—Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 7 a.m. and 2 p.m.: post closes 11½ a.m. and 9 p.m.—This ancient city is pleasantly situated on the banks of the Medway, across which there is a fine bridge of eleven arches, erected in the reign of King John. It is 560 feet long, and 24 feet broad between the parapets; the largest arch has a span of 40 feet, and the others of 30 feet. The Britons called the town Dur-brif, and the Romans Durobriva, and afterwards Roobis; the Saxons altered it to Hrof-ceastre, from a chief named Hrof, and that name has gradually been changed to its present one. Ethelbert, King of Kent, after his conversion to Christianity, in 597, founded the church of St. Andrew, and raised the city into a bishop's see. In 676, Ethelred, King of Mercia, destroyed Rochester, and it was several times severely injured by the Danes. Athelstane, about 930, established three mints here. The Conqueror granted the city to Odo, Bishop of Bayeux, from whom it was taken in the following reign. Henry I., with all his court, was present in May, 1130, at the consecration of the cathedral church, when a fire broke out which reduced nearly the whole of the city to ashes. A similar calamity took place in 1137. Robert, Earl of Gloucester, was confined in this castle in 1141, but was soon after exchanged for King Stephen. The barons seized the castle in 1215, but it was taken from them by John.

Henry III. did much towards restoring the city and repairing the castle; and, in 1251, held a grand tournament between all the English and the foreign knights that chose to present themselves. In 1254, Simon de Montfort besieged the castle, which held out for the king. Several monarchs conferred great privileges upon this city, and frequently visited it. Charles I. levied £70 upon it as ship-money. In 1688, James II. embarked secretly at this port on board a tender, which conveyed him to France. The castle stands near the bridge, and though partially ruinous, still presents a very formidable appearance, and is a fine specimen of Anglo-Norman architecture. The keep is lofty, and is somewhat like the White Tower at London. The city was anciently surrounded by walls. The principal street of Rochester is in a line with the principal one of Chatham, and across the bridge with that of Strood. It is well paved and lighted with gas. To the south-east is the extensive fortification of Fort Pitt; and to the south-west, the military station of Fort Clarence. The town-hall is a handsome brick edifice, erected in 1687, with a clock-house, built by Sir Clondesley Shovel; the city jail is at the back of it. The cathedral is a fine old cruciform structure, consisting of a nave and aisles, transept and choir. Its original founder was Ethelbert, king of Kent, who commenced it about 600, but a very small portion of the original edifice now exists. There are some crypts beneath the choir, and on the stone wall behind the pulpit, a curious fresco painting has been discovered. The bishop's throne has been removed. The western front, 81 feet long, a highly ornamented specimen of Anglo-Norman architecture, contains statues of Henry I. and his queen. The entire length of the building from east to west is 383 feet; length of the west transept, 122 feet; of the east transept, 90; and of the nave and side aisles, 73 feet. The tower is 156 feet high. The cathedral has a library attached. The diocese of Rochester is the smallest in England, and is also the most ancient, next to Canterbury, having been founded by St. Augustine in 604. The diocese now consists of the city and deanery of Rochester, and the whole of the counties of Herts and Essex, except a few parishes in the latter county in the diocese of London. The Bishop of Rochester is styled chaplain to the Archbishop of Canterbury, who for many years disposed of the see; and on state occasions the bishop was cross-bearer to the archbishop. The trade of Rochester chiefly depends upon the neighbouring naval and military establishments of Chatham, and thus a long peace is by no means favourable to its prosperity. There is a large trade in coal, and a considerable export trade in hops, besides an extensive and important oyster fishery, which has been carried on time out of mind, in the creeks and branches of the Medway. Rochester has a custom-house, and the port is privileged to receive wine, spirits, and wood goods. The city was first incorporated by Henry II. or Henry III., and several other charters were granted by subsequent monarchs. The Municipal Act divided the borough into three wards, governed by six aldermen and eighteen councillors, and gave it a commission of the peace. It returns two members to parliament; the mayor is the returning officer.

The Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, Quakers, and Unitarians, have places of worship here. The Royal free school, founded by Henry VIII., has eight exhibitions to the universities. The free Mathematical school, founded by Sir J. Williamson in 1701, has an income of upwards of £650 per annum, and educates about seventy boys. Sir John Hayward endowed some schools with £20 per annum, for the education of twenty children of each sex. In 1315, Potyn's or St. Catherine's hospital was founded for poor sick persons of the city. It now consists of fourteen dwellings, occupied by fourteen poor women, each of whom have £16 per annum. In 1579, Watt's charity was founded for the purpose of lodging and courteously treating six poor travellers or wayfaring men, being no common rogues or proctors, such persons to lodge therein no longer than one night, unless sickness should be the cause thereof; and each to have fourpence given him on his entrance. The charity has been increased by subsequent benefactions to upwards of £2,510, and six poor travellers are still lodged and courteously treated, the surplus of the income being distributed amongst the poor of the different parishes. In 1635, Sir John Hayward founded a charity for the erection of workhouses, to set the poor at work, which has now an income of about £248 per annum. There are other charities amounting to about £486 per annum. The management of most of these charities is vested in seventeen trustees. There are some Roman and Danish remains in the vicinity of Rochester.--- Contains 6,150 acres: 1,738 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 11,743: probable popⁿ in 1849, 13,504: ass^d. prop^y £24,119: poor rates in 1848, £1,475. 3s. ---Market days, Tuesday and Friday. Rail to Brentwood, thence 18 miles: from Derby, through London, &c., 168 miles.---Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 8 a.m.: post closes 4½ p.m.---Rochford is a large but irregularly built town, containing several good houses. The church is an extensive building, with a lofty tower. In the middle of the town stands the market-place. Hops are extensively cultivated in this parish. A singular custom, of which the origin is unknown, prevails at Rochford. At cockerow, on every Wednesday morning after Michaelmas-day, the lord of the manor of Rayleigh holds a court, called the "Lawless Court," on King's-hill, at which the suitors and the stewards whisper to each other, and carry on the business of the court without candles, pen, or ink, their place being supplied by coal; and he that owes suit and service to the court, but neglects to appear, forfeits to the lord double his rent for every hour he is absent. Rochford is a polling-place for the southern division of the county. The Independents have a place of worship here. In 1617, Robert, Lord Ryche, erected almshouses for six poor persons to the west of the town. There are other charities, producing about £42 per annum. The poor-law commissioners have erected a work-house, with accommodation for 300 persons, for the union of Rochford, which comprises 24 parishes, extending over 88 square miles, with a population of about 14,000. ROLLS-LIBERTY, MIDDLESEX, an extra-parochial district in Holborn division of Ossulstone hun^d, Strand union. — Tanner says—In the suburbs of London, on the east side of New Street (now called Chancery Lane), King Henry III., A.D. 1231, began a religious foundation for the instruction and maintenance of all Jews as should be converted to the Christian faith, which he endowed with a yearly pension of seven hundred marks, to be paid out of the Exchequer, till he should provide better; and King Edward I. gave the deadlands of all England to the same good use. This house was under the government of a master and two or three chaplains. It had a church within the precinct, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, which is now called the chapel of the rolls, as being used for the custody of the rolls and records in Chancery; for after the expulsion of the Jews, the number of converts dwindled away; and, in the year 1377, the master-ship of this house was annexed by patent to the office of the keeper of the rolls of Chancery, who is since called the master of the rolls. — Contains 10 acres: 398 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 2,565: probable popⁿ in 1849, 2,949: ass^d prop^y £13,475: poor rates in 1848, £1,266. 11s.

ROMFORD, ESSEX, a parish and market town in the liberty of Havering-atte-Bower, union of Romford: 12 miles from London, 6 from Brentwood, 17 from Chelmsford. — East. Co^r Rail. to Romford station: from Derby, through London, &c., 144 miles. — London letters deliv^d three times each way daily. — This town, which probably derives its name from two Saxon words, signifying broad ford, chiefly consists of one spacious ill-paved street, lighted with gas. In the middle of the town is a spacious market-place and a commodious town-hall. Romford is governed by three local magistrates; the quarter sessions for the liberty are held here, and it is a polling-place for the southern division of the county. There are places of worship for the Independents, Baptists, and Wesleyan Methodists. A school here is endowed with £64 per annum. In 1482, Roger Reede founded almshouses for five poor people, and endowed it with lands producing about £422 per annum. Mary Hide, in 1714, founded a charity for apprenticing poor boys, which has accumulated to a sum of £425 in the three per cent. consols. There are other charities, producing about £40 per annum, besides some small sums lent out to industrious tradesmen. The poor-law commissioners have erected a workhouse, with accommodation for about 500 persons, for the union of Romford, which comprises ten parishes, extending over 59 square miles, with a population of about 20,000. Romford was the birthplace of Francis Quarles, a celebrated poet; he was born in 1592, and became appointed cupbearer to the Queen of Bohemia, daughter of James I., and afterwards secretary to Archbishop Usher in Ireland, from which he was driven by the rebellion of 1641: he sided with the king in the parliamentary wars, and lost all his property, which it is supposed hastened his death, which happened in 1644. Some of his works were very celebrated in the age in which he lived, although not much known at the present time. — The living is a vicarage, with the curacy of Noak-Hill, in the diocese of Rochester: pres. net income, £700: patron, New College, Oxford: pres. incumbent, A. Grant, 1838: contains about 6,119 acres: 1,182 houses: popⁿ in 1851, 5,863: ass^d. prop^y £19,194: poor rates in 1848, £1,546. 15s. — Market day, Wednesday. ROMILY (or ROMLEIGH), CHESTER, a township in the parish of Stockport—(which see for access, &c.): 178 miles from London, 5 from Stockport, 6 from Ashton-under-Lyne. — Money orders issued at Stockport: London letters deliv^d. 9 a.m.: post closes 6½ p.m. — The living is a perpetual curacy in the diocese of Chester: pres. net income, £120: patron, Rector of Stockport: pres. incumbent, W. Newstead, 1837: contains 2,290 acres: 232 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 1,465: ass^d. prop^y £2,835: poor rates in 1848, £312. 15s. Tithes commuted in 1839.

ROMNEY (New), KENT, a parish and market town, partly in the liberty of Romney Marsh, and partly in the lower half hun^d of St. Martin's, Pountney, union of Romney Marsh: 83 miles from London (coach road 70), 9 from Hythe. — Sou. East. Rail. through Ashford to Hamstreet and Appledore, thence 7 miles: from Derby, through London, &c., 215 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 7 a.m.: post closes 7½ p.m. — This town is situated on an eminence in the centre of Romney Marsh, and principally consists of one spacious well-paved street, containing several handsome and commodious houses. The church is a very fine specimen of Norman and early English architecture, with a magnificent tower at the west end. A town-hall and a market-place have been erected within the last half century. Romney is a member of the Cinque ports, and formerly had a fine haven and a flourishing trade; for we find that Charles I. levied £150 upon this place and its dependencies for ship-money. The haven, however, having been destroyed by an irruption of the sea, and the sea having receded one mile and a half from it, it is now quite insignificant as a seaport. Its chief trade is in grazing cattle upon the extensive district of Romney Marsh. It is a borough by prescription, but is not included in the Municipal Act. It returned two members to parliament, until disfranchised by the Reform Act. The corporation at present consists of four resident jurats and three freemen. The town is a polling-place for the eastern division of the county. In 1610, John Southland founded an hospital here for a governor, four poor persons, and two children under fourteen years of age. Each of the poor persons has about £15 per annum, with a residence; the original endowment having been increased in 1728, by a bequest of Mr. Thomas Baker, who also left £5 per annum to the poor of the parish. In the time of Edward I. the town was visited by an awful tempest, which did much injury to it. — The living (St. Nicholas), a vicarage in the diocese of Canterbury, is valued at £6. 16s. 3d.: pres. net income about £200: patron, All Souls' College, Oxford: pres. incumbent, R. Smith, 1839: contains 2,320 acres: 166 houses: popⁿ in 1851, 1,055: ass^d. prop^y £8,740: poor rates in 1848, £252. — Market day, Saturday. Fair, August 21, for stock.

ROMNEY (Old), KENT, a parish and member of the town and port of New Romney: 68 miles from London, 2 from New Romney, 12 from Tenterden. — (For access and postal arrangements, see above). — Adam de Chering founded an hospital here, which in 1363 was re-established as a charity, and in 1481 annexed to St. Mary Magdalene College, Oxford. — The living (St. Clement), a rectory, with that of Romney Marsh, in the diocese of Canterbury, is valued at £15. 19s. 2d.: pres. net income, £246: patron, Archbishop of Canterbury: pres. incumbent, John Nance, 1810: contains 1,670 acres: 18 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 122: ass^d. prop^y with New Romney.

ROMSEY (or RUMSEY) HANTS, a parish, borough, and market town, in the hun^d of King's-Sombourne, Andover division, union of Romsey: 81 miles from London (coach road 74), 8 from Southampton. — Sou. West. Rail., through Bishopstoke to Romsey station: from Derby, through Rugby, Oxford, and Reading, to Romsey, &c., 168 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 7 a.m.: post closes 10 p.m. — This place is pleasantly situated on the river Test, which falls into Southampton Bay at a distance of about five miles, and is crossed at the town by the Andover Canal. A monastery was founded here by King Edward the Elder, in which King Edgar, in 967, placed Benedictine nuns. At the dissolution its revenues amounted to £528. 8s. 10d. per annum.

Part of it now forms the parish church, which stands in a commanding situation, and is a fine old edifice, exhibiting specimens of the architecture of nearly all the ages from the time of its foundation. The interior has recently been restored by the exertions of the vicar. A paved court within the gates forms its eastern precinct; and its southern precinct, in which were the apartments of the abbess and nuns, contains, amongst other buildings, the hall in which the sessions are held for this division of the county, and in which are delivered the lectures of the Literary and Scientific Institution. A sarcophagus was recently found in this church, containing the remains of a female, with red hair still adhering to her skull, and with several articles of jewellery in her coffin. Romsey is very advantageously situated for the purposes of commerce, being in the centre of an extensive and extremely fertile district, well supplied with rivers and canals. The present manufactures are those of parchment and other dressed skins, and the chief trade is wool-stapling. There is a small trade in malt and flour, and a few acres of hops are cultivated. The town was incorporated by James I., but under the Municipal Act the government is vested in four aldermen and twelve councillors. A commission of the peace has been granted, but no recorder appointed. It is a polling-place for the county. There is a small jail. The Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, Baptists, and Presbyterians, have places of worship here. Nowe's charity school, founded in 1718, for educating, clothing, and apprenticing 20 boys, has an income of about £350 per annum, and is participated by three other parishes. Lord Palmerston and family spend about £80 per annum in the support of a school for 130 females; and there is a national school, with a small endowment, for the same number of males. Bartlett's almshouses, founded in 1809, for six females, each of whom has an allowance of £32. 10s. per annum, has an income of £205 per annum. The Romsey poor-law union comprises 12 parishes, extending over 43 square miles, with a population of about 11,000. This was the birthplace of Sir William Petty, the founder of the Lansdowne family, who was born in 1683. Having studied at Leyden and Paris, he became professor of anatomy, and Gresham professor of music. In 1652 he was physician to the army in Ireland, and physician to Henry Cromwell; but being charged with misconduct in the House of Commons, was dismissed from the office of surveyor of forfeited lands. At the Restoration he was knighted, and made surveyor-general of Ireland. He suffered much by the Great Fire, but ultimately retrieved his losses, and died very rich in 1687. To the south of Romsey is Broadlands, an elegant building of white brick, the seat of Lord Palmerston. For nearly two centuries it belonged to the St. Barbe family, but was purchased from them, and almost entirely rebuilt by the father of the present viscount. The park is intersected by the river Test, and the mansion contains a fine collection of valuable paintings. The family of the Temples is said to derive immediately from Algar, Earl of Mercia, whose son was killed in 1071, defending himself against the Normans. One of his descendants, Edwyn, Earl of Leicester and Coventry, assumed the surname of Temple, from some lands granted to him, previously belonging to the knights-templars. His descendant, Sir William Temple, Knight, was secretary to Sir Philip Sydney, and afterwards to the unfortunate Earl of Essex, on whose death he was appointed Provost of Trinity College, Dublin, which he subsequently represented in parliament. In 1622, he was appointed a Master in Chancery. Sir John, his son, was Master of the Rolls in Ireland, in which country he filled many important offices. He sided with Cromwell in the parliamentary war, but was continued in his office on the Restoration, and also appointed Vice-Treasurer of Ireland. His youngest son, Sir John, was Solicitor and Attorney-General and Speaker of the House of Commons in Ireland, and was succeeded by his son Henry, who was created a peer of Ireland in 1722, as Baron Temple and Viscount Palmerston. His grandson and successor was the father of Henry John Temple, G.C.B., M.P., P.C., the present viscount, who now, with such eminent distinction, fills the office of Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.—Embley Park is the seat of William E. Nightingale, Esq.—The living (Virgin Mary) is valued at £20. 18s. 1½d.: pres. net income, £365: patron, Dean and Chapter of Winchester: pres. incumbent, Hon. G. T. Noel, 1840: contains 9,310 acres: 1,096 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 5,347: probable popⁿ in 1849, 6,149: ass^d. prop^y £6,570: poor rates in 1848, £2,479. 14s.—Market day, Saturday. Rail. through Stonehouse and Gloucester to Ross station: from Derby, through Birmingham, Gloucester, &c., 123 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 7 a.m.: post closes 7½ p.m. — This town, founded on the ruins of the Roman Ariconium, is most agreeably situated, in the midst of a highly picturesque and fertile country, on an eminence on the banks of the river Wye. It has lately been much improved, contains several good houses and handsome shops, and is remarkable for its cleanliness. There is a market-place in the centre. The church contains a handsome monument to the benevolent John Kyrle, Pope's "Man of Ross." All the benefits described by the poet as having been conferred by the Man of Ross upon this town were strictly true, and they were paid for out of his own income:—

"Of debts and taxes, wife and children clear,
This man possessed—five hundred pounds a year.
Blush, grandeur, blush! proud courts withdraw your blaze,
Ye little stars! hide your diminished rays."

John Kyrle was born on the 22d of May, 1637, and died on the 20th of November, 1724. The improvements he effected in the town are well described by the poet:—

"Who hung with woods yon mountain's sultry brow?
From the dry rock, who bade the waters flow?
Whose causeway parts this vale with shady rows?
Whose seats the weary traveller repose?
Who taught that heaven-directed spire to rise?
'The Man of Ross,' each lisping babe replies,
Behold the market-place with poor o'erspread,
The Man of Ross divides the weekly bread."

Henry III. made this town a free borough, and it sent members to parliament, but was disfranchised on the petition of the inhabitants some centuries ago. The government of the town is vested in a sergeant-at-mace, four constables, and other officers, who are annually elected at the court-leet of the lord of the manor. The petty sessions for the hundred are held here, and it is a polling-place for the county. A horticultural society, a mechanics' institute, and other similar associations, have been established in the town. The Independents, Baptists, and Quakers, have places of worship here. Walter Scott's charity, or blue-coat school, for clothing and educating sixty children, is endowed with £222. 2s. 8d. per annum. Webbe's hospital, for seven poor persons, founded in 1612, has an income of £87. 15s. Rudhall's hospital, for five poor persons, founded in 1575, has an income of £5. 13s. 10d. Charles Ferrock founded an hospital for four poor persons in 1613, which has now £2. 16s. 4d. per annum. There are other minor charities. In 1835, James Baker bequeathed several legacies and annuities to various persons, subject to which he gave the residue of his property on trust to the churchwardens and overseers of Ross to distribute it, both interest and dividends, in clothing, fuel, and food, twice a year, to the poor of the town not receiving alms. It has been calculated that the fund ultimately to be distributed in this manner will amount to nearly £25,000. The poor-law commissioners have erected a workhouse, with accommodation for 160 persons, for the union of Ross, which comprises 30 parishes, extending over 86 square miles, with a population of about 15,000. John de Ross, an eminent doctor of law, who was appointed bishop of Carlisle by the Pope without any election, was born here in 1318, and died in 1381. — The living, a rectory and vicarage in the diocese of Hereford, is valued at £38. 16s. 3d.: pres. net income, £1,284: patron, Bishop of Hereford: pres. incumbent, C. Rail. to Tunbridge-Wells, thence 7 miles: from Derby, through London, &c., 185 miles. — Money orders issued at Tunbridge-Wells: London letters deliv^d. 9 a.m.: post closes 6 p.m. — This extensive parish occupies very elevated ground, and is in most parts extremely barren. In 800, the monks of St. Denis, in France, founded a church and monastery here, on land granted them by Berkenhold, Duke of the South Saxons. The ancient church of the monastery contains a great number of monumental tablets to the memory of different families. On the north side is a baptistry, belonging to the ancient family of Nevil, lords of Abergavenny, ornamented with the arms of the family. There is an elegant Gothic altar-table, and a handsome font. Upon the wall, near the pulpit, there is a curious representation of the martyrdom of St. Lawrence. The churchwarden's accounts of vestments and other articles belonging to the church, commences with the first year of Henry VIII., and continues down to the present time. The Baptists have a place of worship here. There is a school endowed with £30 per annum; the other charities produce about £20 per annum. — The living (St. Denis), a rectory in the archd^y of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, is valued at £27. 12s. 6d.: pres. net income, £1,454: patron, Earl of Abergavenny: pres. incumbent, R. The streets are narrow and irregular, and the houses have not such a handsome appearance as might be expected from their being mostly built of stone. In the neighbourhood there are several handsome villas; and minerals are plentifully found in the adjacent country. On the other side of the bridge is Masborough, a suburban village, which owed its origin to the establishment of the extensive iron-works for which Rotherham was famed. The iron bridges at Sunderland and Yarm, the Southwark bridge over the Thames, and the largest cannon, and almost every kind of article of cast and wrought iron and steel, were manufactured at the iron-works of Messrs. Walker, but this business has much diminished of late years. So long ago as the time of Leland, we are told that—In Rotherham be veri good smiths for all cutting tools. He adds: Though betwixt Cawoods and Rotherham be good plenty of wood, yet the people burne much yerth cole, because hit is plentifully found ther, and sold good chepe. A mile from Rotherham be veri good pities of cole. The town now contains some large breweries, and several manufactories of starch, rope, and twine. Its trade is much increased by the navigation of the Don, and by the railways which pass through it. The ancient church stood upon the banks of the Don, and was, in the time of the Saxons, the only place of worship in an extensive and well-peopled district. The present church is a handsome modern Gothic erection. A court-leet is held annually in this town, when constables and other officers are elected. The town-hall is a large handsome building, and in it are held the summer sessions for the West Riding. The Presbyterians, Wesleyan Methodists, Independents, Baptists, and Unitarians, have places of worship here. The Independent Academy has accommodation for 25 students. There is a grammar-school, with an income of £23. 15s. 4d.; a charity school, with £77. 10s.; and Hollis's charity school, with £20 per annum. Mrs. Bellamy's almshouses for four unmarried women, founded in 1780, have an income of £66. 3s. 8d. The poor's estate produces about £564, the Great Dole, £60. 12s. 6d., and other charities about £70 per annum. The poor-law commissioners have erected a workhouse, with accommodation for 200 persons, for the union of Rotherham, which comprises 27 parishes, extending over 79 square miles, with a population of about 25,000. The Don valley, near Rotherham, is crossed by the Midland Railway by a viaduct of 30 arches, about half a mile long.---The living (All Saints), a disch^d vicarage in the archd^y and diocese of York, is valued at £16. 8s. 6d.: pres. net income, £170: patron, Earl of Effingham: pres. incumbent, R. Nor. West. Rail. through Rugby to Market-Harborough, thence 7 miles: from Derby, through Rugby, &c., 72 miles. There is an ancient excavation beneath the church at this place, containing a large quantity of human relics, bones, &c., being more numerous, and probably more ancient, than any other in England. It is traditionally said to have been discovered, 150 years ago, by some workmen, while exploring the lower part of the church, and is supposed to have been originally a cell for the confinement of malefactors, or a place of religious seclusion, as there is a passage from it communicating with the ruins of a nunnery in the neighbourhood, which, says Tanner, was probably founded by the Clare family, whose successors in the manor were patrons of it. At the dissolution, its revenues were valued at £10. 10s. 4d. The manufacture of silk plush for hats is carried on in this town. Although the market has long ceased to exist, the market-house, built by Sir Thomas Tresham in 1507, still remains, and was repaired in 1827. The Independents have a place of worship here. A school here, founded in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, is endowed with about £29 per annum. Jesus' hospital, founded at the same period by Owen Ragdale, for eighteen poor men, has an income of £463 per annum. Other charities produce about £70 per annum. He was the ancestor of Sir Clement Cotterell, who was for twenty years groom-porter to James I., and obtained a reversion of the office of master of the ceremonies at St. James's, which continued in this family until the death of Sir Clement, the father of the present representative of the family. Sir Charles, son of the first Sir Clement, translated several works into the English language; and besides being master of the ceremonies, was sent ambassador to the court of Brussels in 1663, and in 1670 made master of requests. His son, Sir Charles, succeeded him as master of the ceremonies, and, in 1679, was appointed commissioner of the Privy Seal. His son, Sir Clement, assumed the surname of Dormer on the death of his cousin, General Dormer, and was succeeded by his son, Sir Charles, of whose seat Horace Walpole thus speaks:—But the greatest pleasure we had was in seeing Sir C. Cotterell Dormer at Rousham. It reinstated Kent with me: he has nowhere shown so much taste. The house is old, and was bad; he has improved it; stuck as close as he could to the Gothic; has made a delightful library; and the whole is comfortable. The garden is Daphne in little. The sweetest little groves, streams, glades, porticoes, cascades, and river imaginable—the scenes are perfectly classic. Well, if I had such a house, such a library, so pretty a place, and so pretty a wife, I think I should let the king send to Herenhausen for a master of the ceremonies. This Sir Charles was the grandfather of the present Mr. Cotterell Dormer, who succeeded his father, Sir Clement, in 1808.

Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 8 a.m. post closes 9 p.m. This town, which was probably founded in the reign of William the Conqueror, and takes its name from a cross erected by the Lady Roysia, Countess of Norfolk, is built in the centre of extensive chalk downs, at the intersection of the two Roman roads, the Iknield-way and Ermin-street. It contains several streets, most of the houses in which are built of brick. The church is a venerable-looking structure, formed from the remains of a priory founded in the 12th century by Eustachius de Mere. Most of the inhabitants are employed in malting. The petty sessions for the division are held here, and this is a polling-place for the county. In 1742, a curious crypt or cavern of chalk, containing a series of rude carvings from subjects in sacred and profane history, was accidentally discovered beneath the market-house. A hawking and hunting seat was erected here by James I. Here are places of worship for the Independents and Quakers. The charities produce about £44 per annum. The poor-law commissioners have erected a workhouse, with accommodation for 300 persons, for the union of Royston, which comprises 29 parishes, extending over 94 square miles, with a population of about 17,000. Kneesworth House is the seat of John Bendyshe, Esq., the head of a family whose surname was originally De Westeley; which, however, they changed for that of Bendish from a considerable lordship in Radwinter, of which they became possessed some time in the twelfth century. The first of whom we have any historical record is Peter de Westeley, alias Bendish, who lived in the reigns of John and Henry III., and one of whose descendants accompanied Edward III. to the famous siege of Calais. One of the posterity of that gentleman was created a baronet, but the title became extinct, and the family is now represented by the present proprietor of Kneesworth, who is a lieutenant in the navy, and a deputy-lieutenant and magistrate of the county.

Rufford Hall, a fine mansion erected in the midst of noble grounds, is the seat of Sir Thomas George Hesketh, Bart., the representative of an ancient family who derived their estates and distinction from their martial achievements about, and soon after, the time of the Norman Conquest, and which for more than seven centuries has retained possession of the greater part of their old patrimonial estates. The first of this family of whom we have any direct historical record is Richard de Heskayth, lord of Heskayth, Rufford, and other manors in the twelfth century, most of whose lineal posterity held distinguished positions in their country. One of his descendants, Thomas Hesketh, Esq., who married Harriet, daughter and coheir of Ashley Cowper, Esq., and niece of the poet Cowper, was created a baronet in 1761. He, however, died childless, and the title devolved upon his brother Sir Robert, of whom the present honourable owner of Rufford is a direct descendant.

At the dissolution, its revenues amounted to £254 per annum, and the site and the greater part of the lands were granted to George, Earl of Shrewsbury, from whom, by the marriage of his granddaughter and heiress with Sir George Saville of Barrowby, in Lincolnshire, it went to his family. It has of late been restored by the noble Earl, who, notwithstanding a legal provision, succeeded to the property, and it is now one of the most splendid domains in the county. Divine service is performed in the abbey every Sunday, the Rev. James Cox being the officiating chaplain. The mansion contains many noble rooms, and is singularly affluent in objects of interest, both in the way of tapestry, paintings, and furniture. For the noble Earl's genealogy and family history, see LUMLEY CASTLE, DURHAM. Contains 10,320 acres: 64 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 363: ass^d. prop^r £4,217: poor rates in 1848, £143. 10s.

RUGBY, WARWICK, a parish and market town in Rugby division of Knightlow hun^d, union of Rugby, on the river Avon, near the Grand Junction Canal: 83 miles from London, 13 from Coventry. Nor. West. Rail. to Rugby station: from Derby, through Leicester, &c., 50 miles. Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7 a.m. and 1½ p.m.: post closes 9½ a.m., 12½ p.m., and 9½ p.m. This town, anciently called Rocheberie, and also Rokeby, from one of its owners, is agreeably situated on a rising ground on the south-eastern bank of the river Avon. It has three principal streets, containing houses of brick and wood, many of them with thatched roofs. Some good modern residences have, however, recently been erected.

The church is a venerable structure, with a square tower, in the early English style. Rugby owes its present flourishing condition to the circumstance of its being the centre at which a number of railways meet together; but it derived its former importance and its present celebrity from the noble foundation of Laurence Sheriffe, citizen of London, who endowed a public school here, in the 9th year of Elizabeth, with property which now produces upwards of £5,000 per annum; it is managed by twelve trustees, and the school is under the control of a head-master, with six classical assistants. There are 50 boys on the foundation, and the whole school contains 300 scholars, who have 14 exhibitions of £40 each to the universities for seven years. The elegant range of white brick buildings, in the Tudor style, connected with the establishment, was erected in 1808. There is a detached chapel fitted up upon the model of the choir of a cathedral, and containing a beautiful statue by Chantrey of Dr. James, a former head-master. Belonging to the school are almshouses for twelve poor men, with an income of £218. 8s. per annum, besides a gown to each. Mr. Elborough, in 1707, founded a charity school for 30 boys and girls, and almshouses for six widows; the income of both the charities is about £121 per annum. Besides the above-mentioned, there are other charities producing about £90 per annum. The Rugby poor-law union comprises 39 parishes, extending over 116 square miles, with a population of about 18,000. A castle was erected here in the reign of Stephen, of which no vestige now remains. The living is valued at £17. 19s. 2d.: contains 2,190 acres: 496 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 4,008: probable popⁿ in 1849, 4,609: ass^d. prop^r. £5,275: poor rates in 1848, £283. 2s. The tithes were commuted in 1775. Fairs: last Monday in January, March, April, June, July, Monday before October 27, second Monday in December, first Monday after Christmas, Feb. 17, May 15, Aug. 21, Monday before Sept. 29, Nov. 17, Tuesday before Easter, and last Wednesday in September. Bankers: National Provincial Bank of England—draw on London and Westminster Bank: Butlin & Sons—draw on Smith, Payne, & Co. Inns: Three Horse Shoes, and Eagle. Rugby Lodge is the seat of Thomas Caldecott, Esq., the representative of an ancient Leicestershire family, and who is a barrister, a magistrate, and deputy-lieutenant of the county.

Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7 a.m. and 5 p.m.: post closes 7 p.m. and 10 p.m. This place, called by the Saxons Bornicofan, and pleasantly situated on the southern bank of the Mersey, was formerly of very little importance, but owes its present prosperity chiefly to the Bridgewater Canal. Ethelfleda, widow of Ethelred, Earl of Mercia, built a castle here, commanding a passage from the kingdom of Mercia to that of Northumberland. In 1133, William Fitz-Nigel founded a monastery of canons-regular at this place. The town, which is lighted with gas, is divided into Higher and Lower Runcorn, and is surrounded with highly picturesque and diversified scenery. A considerable Irish, Scotch, Welsh, and English coasting trade is carried on, which is much increased by the facilities afforded to it by the Mersey and Irwell docks. In the neighbourhood there are several extensive quarries, containing freestone of a red colour and coarse grain. There is very good bathing, which brings a number of visitors to the town during the season. An extremely handsome and spacious new church was erected in 1838. There are places of worship for the Wesleyan Methodists and Huntingdonians. There are two schools, one endowed with £42. 9s., and the other with £49 per annum. The other charities amount to about £86 per annum; besides Cheshire's library, containing a number of valuable books; and almshouses for six poor people, who have an allowance of 3s. 6d. per week each. Rydal water, which communicates by a narrow channel with Grasmere lake, is fed by the Rothay; a wood screens its left bank, but moist grounds in some places, in others low wet rocks, form its margin. In its course there are some islands which, combined with its reedy shore, give it a very picturesque aspect, especially as two of them are clothed with irregular masses of wood. At the extremity is Rydal Head, a lofty cliff, 3,000 feet high, from the summit of which the whole of the surrounding striking scenery can be surveyed. On the banks of this pleasing water stands Rydal Mount, late the residence of William Wordsworth, Esq., the eminent poet, the intimate friend of Coleridge and Southey; he was made poet laureate, and became chief of that school called the Lake Poets. The mansion, which stands on the north side of the road, is an old-fashioned structure, but commands a fine view of Windermere and the surrounding country, screened, however, behind by the towering height of Rydal Head. The park is interspersed with an abundance of old oaks, while a number of fine elms and other forest trees, shedding their umbrage on the rocky protuberances, diversify the landscape. In addition to these natural beauties, the cascades of the Gill, a rivulet which runs through the lawn, are, in the opinion of Gilpin and other eminent tourists, almost unparalleled in their beauty. Although of highly reputable parentage, Mr. Wordsworth, after passing through his course of classical instruction, had, like his friends just named, to endure a long progress of the res augustæ domæ. Poverty was his lot, and perhaps few men, it may be not one, of his singular capacity and power of imagination, ever had to work through so much travail in bringing his works before the public; and when they were published, no man had ever greater obloquy or more mortification to endure. The fact was, the genius of Wordsworth was at first unsuited to the time in which he lived. An artificial state of society universally prevailed. All was together extrinsic in social converse, while Wordsworth's mind and feelings were attuned and trained, with Grecian severity, to enjoy and depict the beauties of natural objects. His spirit leapt into the very depth of the philosophy of nature. To him, a broad, stony, open highway, skirted by low and stunted hedges, and girded by green fields, with a sunny sky and flitting clouds above him, was an object of inestimable beauty. He told of that beauty in language as graphic as it was true; but the world knew it not, and he had long to wait for his guerdon of fame. Yet he did get it in the end, and had the satisfaction of knowing, before he passed into his eternal estate, that his words had been made the chief lever for bringing back the minds of the British people to the appreciation of some of the simplest, the sweetest, and the purest of the enjoyments of which humanity is capable on this side of the grave. The latter portion of Mr. Wordsworth's life was made easy by the presentation of the Government to him of the office of stamp distributor for his district in Westmoreland, and the gradual accumulation of wealth from his copyrights. On the death of Southey he was made poet laureate, and died in 1849, full of years and honour.---The living is a perpetual curacy in the archd^y. of Richmond, and diocese of Chester: pres. net income, £100: patron, Lady F. RYDE (or RIDE), HANTS, a chapelry and township in Newchurch parish, Isle of Wight: 100 miles from London (coach road 77), 5 from Portsmouth.---Brighton and Sou. Coast Rail. to Portsmouth, thence 5 miles: from Derby, through London, &c., 232 miles.---Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 8 a.m. and 4½ p.m.: post closes 10½ a.m. and 4½ p.m.---This handsome town, which a few years ago was an inconsiderable village, is agreeably situated upon the declivity of an eminence, and is divided into Upper and Lower. The principal street is that by which these divisions are connected, and new streets are rapidly rising in every direction. The houses are neat and commodious, and most of them ornamented with small shrubberies. The streets are well lighted with gas, supplied with water, watched and paved. A splendid range of buildings, called Brigstoke Terrace, is most commodiously situated with regard to the pier. This pier extends from the quay to low-water mark, a distance of 2,260 feet, and forms a delightful promenade. The church, rebuilt in 1827, is a fine Gothic edifice. The interior of St. James's chapel is highly ornamented. There are places of worship for the Independents and Wesleyans. The market-house and town-hall are elegant modern structures. Ryde is so delightfully situated in the midst of an extremely romantic country, its bathing is so excellent, and its air so salubrious, that it is much resorted to by the inhabitants of the metropolis during the summer. There is a continuous steamboat communication with Portsmouth and Southampton, and there is every accommodation for those who visit it either for health or for pleasure. It has a theatre, arcades, numerous lodging-houses, and a large number of spacious, elegant, and commodious hotels. Near the sea, on the west of the pier, is the Royal Victoria Yacht Club House, a spacious and handsome building, the first stone of which was laid by H. R. H. Prince Albert on March 2, 1846. An annual regatta generally takes place about the end of August. The neighbourhood of Ryde contains many interesting localities, among which may be mentioned the burial-place of the seamen drowned in the Royal George, Binstead quarries and church, and the remains of Old Quara Abbey. — The living (St. Thomas) is a curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Newchurch, in the diocese of Winchester: patron, the Vicar. — Market days, Tuesday and Friday. Fair, July 5. — Bankers: Suburban Branch of National Provincial Bank of England—draw on London and Westminster Bank: Branch of Hampshire Banking Co.—draw on Jones, Lloyd, & Co. — Hotels: Crown, Bearley's, Royal, and Yelf's.

RYE (or WEST RYE), SUSSEX, a parish, borough, market town, and cinque port, in Gostrow hundred, rape of Hastings, union of Rye, on the coast of the English Channel: 83 miles from London (coach road 63), 10 from Hastings. — Sou. East. Rail. through Ashford to Rye: from Derby, through London, &c., 215 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7½ a.m. and 8 p.m.: post closes 9¼ p.m. and 6.55 a.m. — This town is pleasantly situated upon a rocky eminence, sloping gradually towards the rich alluvial marsh lands on the north and west. It was anciently surrounded by the sea, and in the reign of Edward III. a wall was erected round it. In the twelfth century, William de Ypres, Earl of Kent, erected a tower, the remains of which still bears his name. The French took and plundered Rye in 1377, and again in the reign of Henry VI. The town contains several good streets, with commodious and handsome houses. The principal one is of considerable length. The church is a fine old cruciform structure, with an embattled tower. In the centre of the town stands a neat brick building, used as a market-place and town-hall. The streets are well paved, lighted, and supplied with water. The sea having receded a distance of two miles, the harbour has of course been much injured, but it is in contemplation to improve it so as to form a harbour of refuge. A new channel has already been cut to the sea, and the old one blocked up, so that the harbour will now admit vessels of 200 tons. There is a considerable trade in coal, corn, timber, hops, oak, bark, fish, chalk, &c., and there is a mackerel and herring fishery. The river Rother has been made navigable to Robert's-bridge. An ancient building, now used as the borough gaol, was formerly a tower or castle, built to command the harbour: beneath it is a battery of 18 guns. Rye is one of the cinque ports, although not originally named amongst them. It has been a corporation from time immemorial, but under the Municipal Act the government of the borough is vested in four aldermen and twelve councillors, and a commission of the peace has been granted. Before the passing of the Reform Act it returned two members to parliament, but now returns only one. The mayor is the returning officer. There are places of worship here for the Independents, Baptists, and Wesleyan Methodists. In 1702, James Sanders founded and endowed the grammar-school with 50 acres of land. Thomas Peacock's school, for educating 70 boys, founded in 1644, has £36 per annum. There are also two almshouses for widows, and other charities producing about £10 per annum. The Rye poor-law union comprises 12 parishes, extending over 54 square miles, with a population of about 13,000. In the neighbourhood are the remains of an ancient religious establishment. — The living (St. Mary), a disendowed vicarage in the archdiocese of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, is valued at £42. 13s. 4d.: pres. net income, £410: patron, G. C. Langford, Esq.: incumbent, Hen. His lordship derives his descent from Sir Ralph Jocelyn, who was lineally descended from Sir Gilbert de Jocelyne, one of the companions in arms of William the Conqueror. Sir Ralph was a London merchant, and sheriff of that city in 1458, and lord mayor in 1464. In 1467, Sir Ralph represented the city in parliament, and was again lord mayor in 1476. The elder brother of this opulent citizen, Thomas Jocelyn, Esq., of Hyde Hall, was great-grandfather of Sir Thomas Jocelyn, K.B., whose descendant, Robert Jocelyn, Esq., was high sheriff of Hertfordshire in 1677, having been created a baronet in 1665. The great-grandson of that honourable gentleman was made Lord High Chancellor of Ireland in 1739, and was raised to the peerage in 1743, by the title of Baron Newport, and was further elevated in 1755 to the Viscounty of Jocelyn. Robert, the son of that nobleman, was created Earl of Roden in the peerage of Ireland in 1771, a title to which the present noble earl succeeded, as third earl, in 1820, but was enrolled as a peer of parliament by patent in the following year. His lordship is also Baron Clanbrassell in the peerage of the United Kingdom, a Knight of St. Patrick, a Privy Councillor, and Auditor-General of the Exchequer of Ireland.

SALISBURY (or NEW SARUM), WILTS, a city, the seat of a see, in the hun^d. of Underditch, situated in a valley, and occupying a neck of land formed by the confluence of the Bourne with the Upper Avon: it comprises the parishes of St. Edmund, St. Martin, and St. Thomas: 96 miles from London (coach road 82), 21 from Southampton.---Sou. West. Rail. through Bishopstoke to Salisbury station: from Derby, through Rugby, Oxford, and Reading, to Salisbury, 189 miles.---Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 7 a.m.: post closes 9½ p.m.---Salisbury first arose out of the ecclesiastical arrangements which were so frequent within the two or three centuries after the settlement of the Romish missionary, Augustine, in this country, for the diocese appears to have been planned out about the year 704, by Ina the Saxon, who took from the diocese of Winchester the counties of Wilts, Dorset, Somerset, Devon, and Cornwall, the see of which he placed at Sherborne in Dorsetshire. In 905, three new bishoprics were taken out of the diocese of Sherborne, and the see itself was removed to Wilton in Wiltshire, whence it was removed to Old Sarum, or the ancient Salisbury, which William of Malmesbury describes as being more of a castle than a city, being a fortified place on a hill near to New

Salum. In this castle a cathedral was founded by Bishop Herman, and finished, endowed, and consecrated to the honour of the Blessed Virgin, by his successor, Bishop Osmond, in the year 1092. But a garrison was placed in the castle by King Stephen, who quarrelled with the bishop; and the soldiers having levied contributions on the monks, and interfered with their proceedings, Bishop Poor, in 1217, obtained a dispensation from the pope, on the authority of which he removed the see to Salisbury;—and “that they might begin at the house of God,” observes Camden, “the bishop, in a pleasant meadow, before called Merifield (the name of which, but not the precise locality, had previously been revealed, in a vision of the night, to the reverend head of the distressed ecclesiastics), laid the foundation of the great church, a stately pile of building, the which, with its high steeple and double cross aisles, by its venerable grandeur, strikes its spectators with a sacred joy; and was, in forty-three years’ space, finished at a great expense, and dedicated, A.D. 1258, in the presence of King Henry III.” The diocese now consists of the whole of the counties of Wilts and Dorset, with the exception of the two deaneries of Reading and Wallingford; the net revenue of the bishop averaging something less than £4,000, and that of the dean and chapter about £3,800, the several members of their body being also provided with dwellings. The city of Salisbury is pleasantly situated and well arranged, the environs being adorned with many elegant villas. The streets are generally parallel, or cross at right angles, having spaces for several delightful gardens, while the branches of the river Avon meander through the city in the Venetian style, crossed by so many bridges, that Salisbury is said to have more of them than any other place in Europe. The principal stream of the Avon runs to the west of the town, and over it there are also two stone bridges, which open the connection with the agreeable suburban dependence of Fisherton-Anger, whilst another on the south makes a way to East Harnham. Salisbury has preserved much of its ancient appearance, and exhibits some fine examples of the domestic architecture of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, with their plaster and timber-bound walls and gables turned to the street. The market-place is a spacious area, “well watered with a streamlet.” The council and sessions house, a conspicuous edifice with a Doric portico, stands at the south-east corner. The Poultry-cross, which is also here, is a curious hexagonal building, with a conical roof supported by pillars. But of course the chief glory of the city is its cathedral. It is a splendid structure in the form of a double cross, with a highly enriched tower, and the loftiest spire in England, rising from the centre to the height of 404 feet from the ground. By the best judges, this noble pile has been pronounced one of the finest specimens of the pointed and early Gothic style of architecture in existence. The east window represents, in stained glass, the resurrection of our Saviour, after a design by Sir Joshua Reynolds. The interior of the building presents many beauties, but is not, perhaps, from the brokenness of its parts, so striking in its general aspect as many other similar edifices. One curious fact connected with it has not been un-wittily told in Dr. Heylin’s translation of some quaint Latin verses written by Dr. Rogers:

“How many days in one whole year there be,
So many windows in our church we see;
So many marble pillars there appear,
As there are hours throughout the fleeting year;
So many gates as moons one year does view—
Strange tales to tell, but not so strange as true.”

The place called “the Close,” which adjoins the cathedral, is a large area of nearly half a square mile, surrounded by the habitations of the ecclesiastical dignitaries and of some few private persons. The bishop’s palace, which stands near the south-east corner of the cathedral, is an extensive edifice, apparently erected and altered in different ages. The other prominent or public buildings are the theatre, the assembly and concert rooms, the infirmary, and the county jail, which is at Fisherton-Anger. The living of St. Edmund’s is a rectory not in charge, returned at £115; gross income, £181; patron, the Bishop.—St. Martin’s is a vicarage, rated at £11. 3s. 1½d., returned at £55; gross income, £188; patron in 1841, William Wyndham, Esq.—St. Thomas’s is a perpetual curacy, returned at £80; gross income, £118; patrons, the Dean and Chapter. Besides the Established churches, there are here two Independent, formed in 1757 and 1806; a Baptist, formed in 1688; a Wesleyan Methodist, in 1811; a Swedenborgian, in 1831; and places of worship for Roman Catholics and Unitarians. In the Close is a grammar-school for the choristers; master’s salary, £30 per annum. In this school the celebrated Joseph Addison received the rudiments of his education. The city grammar-school was founded by Queen Elizabeth, and is under the control of the municipal charity trustees: income in 1837, £26. 1s. 8d. A school for eight orphan females, daughters of poor gentlemen, was founded by the Godolphin family; with these the mistress is allowed £280 per annum, and £30 for house rent. The College of Matrons, founded by Dr. Seth Ward, one of the bishops of Salisbury, for the support of ten clergymen’s widows; original endowment, £200 per annum; income in 1833, £654. 4s. 4d. St. Nicholas’ hospital, near Harnham-bridge, founded by Bishop Poor, for a master and twelve brethren and sisters, with endowment by Bishop Bingham for upholding religious service by two chaplains in the chapel of St. John-on-the-Bridge, a purpose which afforded a pretext for the temporary lapse of the whole property to the crown, in the reign of Henry VIII., on the ground of superstitious usage; estimated annual value of property in 1833, £1,059. 9s. 4d.; amount of fines on last renewal, £2,051. 4s.; the fines and produce of timber being received by the master to his own use. Trinity hospital, founded in the reign of Richard II., for twelve aged brethren; income in 1838, £46. 5s. 5d., besides £134. 8s. 8d. in hands. To these may be added—Bricet’s hospital for six aged widows, each of whom receives 3s. 6d. weekly;—Eyre’s hospital for six men and their wives, who also receive 3s. 6d. per week;—Frowd’s hospital for six aged men and six women, who receive each 4s. 6d. per week;—Taylor’s hospital for six aged members, who have each 3s. 6d. per week;—and Blechynden’s hospital for six aged women, who have each 2s. 6d. per week. Sir Thomas White’s charity for loans, without interest, consists of £400, accumulated from payments of £104 every twenty-four years (the last of which was made in 1827), and lent out in sums of £25 each for ten years to free-men, particularly those who are clothiers. There are many other endowed charities, the income derived from the whole being nearly £5,000 per annum. The municipal charity trustees, twenty-three in number, were appointed on 11th February, 1837, and the sum in their hands on 1st January, 1838, for charitable purposes, amounted to £783. 11s. 4d. Several species of manufacture were at one time carried on here, but they have all declined; and apart from its internal trade, Salisbury now chiefly depends for its business on the surrounding agricultural district. The city was made free, shortly after the foundation of the cathedral, by Henry III., but numerous charters were granted by different monarchs up to the time of Queen Anne. Under the Municipal Act, the borough now includes the parishes of Milford and Fisherton-Anger, and is divided into three wards, governed by six aldermen and eighteen common councillors, under the usual corporate style; their public income is about £1,500 a year. Salisbury returns two members to parliament, and is a polling-place and the principal place of election for the southern division of the county. — Contains 480 acres: 1,871 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 10,086: probable popⁿ in 1849, 11,599: ass^d. prop^r £18,266: poor rates in 1848, £4,925. 8s. — Market days, Tuesday and Saturday. Fairs: Tuesday after Jan. 6, cattle; Tuesday after Weyhill fair, for hops and cheese. — Bankers: Everett and Smith—draw on Barclay, Bevan, & Co.; Wilts and Dorset Banking Company—draw on London and Westminster Bank, and Williams, Deacon, & Co. — Inns: White Hart, Red Lion, and Lamb.

SALTASH, CORNWALL, a chapelry and market town in the parish of St. Stephen, south division of the hun^d. of East: 249 miles from London (coach road 221), 5 from Plymouth.---Gt. West. Rail. through Bristol and Exeter to Plymouth, thence 5 miles: from Derby, through Birmingham and Bristol, &c., 263 miles.---Money orders issued at Plymouth: London letters deliv^d. 10½ a.m.: post closes 2½ p.m.---Saltash being one of the principal passes into Cornwall, although a small place, early became one of importance, especially during the great civil war between Charles I. and the Parliament, being at first garrisoned by the latter, but surrendered without opposition to the royalists, under Sir Ralph Hopton, in 1642. It again fell into the hands of the republican forces in 1643, was shortly afterwards taken by assault by their opponents, but was ultimately abandoned by them in 1646. The town is situated on a rocky summit, rising from the bank of the river Tamar, consisting of three narrow and irregularly-formed streets, with the chapel of ease and the town-hall crowning the height. Beneath the last of these two structures there is an open market-place. The inhabitants are mostly fishermen, or connected with the docks at Devonport, and a considerable trade in malt and beer is consequently carried on in those articles. The grammar-school has a small endowment, and the other charities only produce about £11 a year. Saltash was made a free borough in the reign of Henry III., when the burgesses acquired considerable rights over the Tamar, and part of Plymouth Sound, but it was not included under the Municipal Reform Act. It sent members to parliament from the time of Edward VI., but was disfranchised by the Reform Act.---The living (St. Nicholas) is a perpetual curacy in the archd^r. of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter: pres. net income, £100: patrons, Executors of Sir R. Saltwood Castle is said to have been first erected by the son of Hengist—(see HYNTH.) It was rebuilt by Archbishop Courtenay in the reign of Richard II. The walls encircle an extensive area, of an elliptical form, surrounded by a very broad and deep moat, partly natural, and partly artificial. The entrance into the first court was by a gateway, now in ruins, defended by a portcullis: the outer walls were strengthened by several circular and square towers, all of which are dilapidated. The keep, or gatehouse, is a noble pile, having two lofty round towers in front, flanking the entrance, over which, on the summit of the building, are machicolations. The entrance-hall has been continued through to the back front, which opened into the inner court, but is now divided into two apartments by fire-places and chimneys. The front division is vaulted and strongly groined. The deep grooves for a portcullis are still in good repair within this entrance. The summit of the roof commands a most extensive view, to which the white cliffs of Boulogne, and the intermediate space of water, constantly animated by shipping, give a strong interest. —The living (St. Peter and St. Paul), a rectory in the diocese of Canterbury, is valued at £34: pres. net income, £602: patron, Archbishop of Canterbury: pres. incumbent, James Croft, 1812: contains 2,480 acres: 84 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 520: ass^d prop^r £5,761: poor rates in 1848, £305. 3s. —Sandling Park is the residence of Mr. Deccles, M.P. for the eastern division of Kent.

Co^a Rail. to Hythe, thence 3 miles: from Derby, through London, &c., 210 miles. — Money orders issued at Folkestone: London letters deliv^d. 7½ a.m.: post closes 9 p.m. — This may be called a beau-ideal village. Resting immediately upon the sea-shore, most of the habitations have been fitted up with a great degree of elegance for the reception of visitors. Baths, both hot and cold, have been provided for invalids, whilst the beach, shingly and somewhat sudden in its descent, is amply supplied with machines for those who prefer a dip in the open sea. Running for nearly half a mile along the coast, the British Channel lies open with all its busy sails before it, whilst, behind, rises a series of abrupt hills, from which is commanded delightful views, not only of the neighbouring country, but of the opposite shores of France, the harbour and the vessels of Boulogne, with its pier and town, being, on a fine day, distinctly visible to the naked eye. With these natural advantages, Sandgate has become a favourite place of resort, and is largely frequented during the summer season. There is a castle here similar to those of Deal and Walmer; and the Royal Military Canal, which begins its course at Cliff End, in Sussex, has its emboucheur at Sandgate. In the neighbourhood are many elegant villas. On the cliffs there are several strong batteries. — The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archd^y and diocese of Canterbury: pres. net income, £192: patron, Hon. J. D. Bligh: pres. incumbent, S. The manor, before the Conquest, was the property of Algar, Earl of Mercia, but was bestowed by William I. on Hugh Lupus, the great Earl of Chester; and after having, through succeeding ages, been held by various noble personages, and especially by Sampson Lodewicke, the historian of the county, and friend of Camden, fell into the hands of Mr. Digby, from whom it descended to Lord Gerard, whose granddaughter matching with William, Duke of Hamilton, it went into his Grace's family, by one of whom it was sold to the first Lord Harrowby. The mansion-house, which was burnt down in June, 1848, was an elegant structure, beautifully situated on a considerable eminence, which commands a very fine and luxuriant prospect. There are some remains of a former edifice, which was defended by a deep moat, a portion of which is still visible. The present noble proprietor of this splendid domain derives his immediate descent from Sir Dudley Ryder, Knt., a barrister of great eminence, who was appointed solicitor-general in 1733, attorney-general in 1736, and chief justice of the Court of King's Bench in 1754. A patent was signed by the king for his elevation to the peerage in 1756, but he died before the proceedings could be completed, and his son, Nathaniel Ryder, Esq., was created Baron Harrowby of Harrowby, in the county of Lincoln, in 1776. He was succeeded by his son, Dudley, who was, in 1809, created Viscount Sandon and Earl of Harrowby. His lordship died in 1847, when he was succeeded by the present peer, who had long been a member of the House of Commons, and had represented Liverpool for seventeen years, and for a short time secretary to the India Board, distinguished alike for his ability, straightforwardness, and high principle.

SANDWICH, KENT, a cinque port, borough, and market town, in the hun^d. of Eastr, lathe of St. Augustine, union of Eastr: 98 miles from London (coach road 68), 11 from Dover.---Sou. East. Rail. to Sandwich station: from Derby, through London, &c., 230 miles.---Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 8 a.m. and 4 p.m.: post closes 9½ p.m. and 8.5 a.m.---It stands upon the southern bank of the river Stour, about two and a half miles distant of Pegwell Bay, into which the river empties itself. Most of the houses are ancient, and the town consequently appears to be very irregularly built; the streets are still narrow and incommodious, but many improvements have been effected of late years through the instrumentality of an act of parliament. On every side, except that by the river, Sandwich is surrounded by the remains of its ancient walls. The Stour is spanned by a bridge of two arches, in the centre of which there is a swing-bridge to connect the town with Monar and the Isle of Thanet, and vessels can consequently pass without lowering their masts. The port was once of very considerable importance, but for several centuries the harbour has been blocked up with sand, the obstruction having been greatly accelerated by the sinking of a vessel called the Caryke, belonging to Pope Pius IV., so that only small vessels can now pass up the Stour, though the river is still 11 feet deep, and 150 broad at spring-tides. The trade of the port is therefore trifling, chiefly consisting in the import of domestic articles for the surrounding district, and the export of agricultural products, such as flour, seeds, wool, bark, ashes, and other commodities of a similar nature. Ship-building and rope-making are, however, still carried on to some extent in the town and neighbourhood. The parishes of Sandwich are in the archd^y and diocese of Canterbury. The living of St. Clement's is a vicarage, rated at £13. 16s. 10d.; gross income, £325; patron, Archdeacon of Canterbury;—that of St. Mary's is a disch^d vicarage, rated at £8. 1s., returned at £100; gross income, £125; patron, Archdeacon of Canterbury;—and that of St. Peter's is a rectory, rated at £8, returned at £145; gross income, £150; patrons in 1835, the Lord Chancellor, and Mayor and Corporation of Sandwich, alternately. A national school contains ninety males and sixty-five females, and is partly supported by subscription, and endowment of charity school—£25. 4s. per annum. The free grammar-school was founded by Sir R. Manwood; income about £40 per annum. At the date of the education returns, there were no scholars on the foundation. This school has four scholarships in Lincoln College, Oxford, and the alternate nomination to four in Caius College, Cambridge. Other charities in 1836, about £180 per annum, besides £32. 8s. per annum at the death of certain individuals. The Independents and Wesleyan Methodists have chapels here. Under the Municipal Act, the borough is governed by four aldermen and twelve common councillors, under the usual corporate style, and has a commission of the peace. Sandwich unites with Deal and Walmer in returning two members to parliament. The family of Montague take the title of earl from this place.—Contains 1,960 acres: 595 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 2,913: probable popⁿ in 1849, 3,350: ass^d prop^y £7,278: poor rates in 1848, £858. 15s.—Bankers: Branch of London and County Joint Stock Banking Company—draw on Head Office, 21 Lombard Street; Suburban Branch of National Provincial Bank of England—draw on London and Westminster Bank.—Inns: Bell, and Fleur-de-lis.

SARK, an island in the English Channel. It contains about 2 square miles, or 1,400 acres, and 600 inhabitants. This place has a resident lord or sovereign, who, with his parliament, raises taxes to the amount of fourpence in the pound, and has a regiment of militia of 100 men, with ten pieces of artillery. Brechnou, a dependency of this lordship, has two families settled on it. Sark is nearly encompassed by inaccessible rocks—the most accessible place being so steep, that a subterraneous carriage-way has been cut through the cliff. The island is well watered, and the climate is remarkably healthy. In 1816 and 1820 there were no burials out of a population of 488 persons, and not 1 in 100 upon an average of 10 years. The soil is fruitful, and rabbits and wild fowl abound. Stockings, gloves, and what are called Guernsey jackets, for sailors, are made here. Fishing is one of the principal employments of the inhabitants. In 1834, a copper-mine was discovered in the island, and a company was soon afterwards formed for working it. An advantageous lease having been obtained from Peter Le Pelley, Esq., the lord of the manor, operations on a limited scale were commenced, and carried on for some years; but in the absence of that energy so absolutely necessary in the prosecution of mining undertakings, and for the want of a steam-engine, the company were unable to attain the depth at which copper and other ores are usually met with. Whilst the directors were determining on their future operations, a silver-mine was discovered in the south-west part of the island, and, from its very inviting character, the company immediately determined on erecting a steam-engine of 120 horse-power, in such a situation as would prove most advantageous to the working of the copper and silver-mines, by keeping them both clear of water; and as the silver and copper lodes intersected each other, this object was easily attained. An engine was accordingly erected, and the engine-shaft sunk to the depth of 40 fathoms below the adit. Three other shafts were also sunk in the silver-mine; one to the east of the engine, called Prince's shaft, sunk 30 fathoms below the adit, near the spot where the silver lode intersects the copper lode; and the two others to the west of the engine; the one named Le Pelley's shaft was sunk to a depth of 40 fathoms below the adit (in this shaft, pump-work is also fixed, and worked by means of flat rods from the engine); the other shaft, called Sark's Hope shaft, was sunk 20 fathoms below the adit. In 1841, active measures were in progress to sink these shafts to greater depths. In driving levels from the engine shaft towards Sark's Hope shaft, silver ore has been met with in greater or less quantities, but the parts of the mines which have produced the greatest quantity are in the vicinity of Le Pelley's and Sark's Hope shafts. The ore which has been raised above the adit within 15 fathoms of either side of Le Pelley's shaft has been principally a chloride of silver, with some traces of carbonate of copper; immediately below this a sulphurate of silver has been found, which has continued down to the 40 fathom level, from whence ore has been raised, which produced 639 ounces of fine silver.

SARUM (OLD), WILTS, formerly a city and borough in the parish of Stratford-under-the-Castle, and one of the most ancient places in the kingdom: 82 miles from London, 2 from Salisbury, 3 from Wilton.—(For access, &c., see SALISBURY.)—The site has been successively occupied as a town by the Britons, Romans, Saxons, Normans, and English; but as Salisbury, or New Sarum, rose in importance, the old town declined, till at last not a single habitation is left near the place where it formerly stood—a few fragments of the remains of the old castle, the traces of the ramparts and ditch, being all that is left as the physical evidence of its existence. In speaking of it, Mr. Bowles, in his own pleasing way, says—"I turned my eyes, and beheld the vast and solitary plains below, stretching on every side, like ocean;—to the north-west, hid only by an intervening elevation of the Downs, Stonehenge, 'wonder of ages,' was still gitting in her sad glory, to which most ancient temple of the sun it might be conceived the bards, descending in procession, whilst it was yet dark, on solemn festivals, from the sacred hill of Salisbury, and joining in the open space between the vast forests, struck their harps in acclaim as the mighty object of their adoration slowly ascended above the eastern hills. To the west, south-west, east, and north-east, strode on, in direct lines, over hill and vale—with traces, after 15 centuries, distinct as yesterday—the four mighty Roman roads, here meeting as in a centre. Immediately on our right, a little below the mound on which the Norman banner floated on the aerial keep of the citadel, we marked the site of the ancient and vanished cathedral. Towards the east, anciently appeared the battlements of Clarendon palace; to the south-west, the field of tournament, of which the chivalrous Cœur de Lion appointed five in England; to the east and south-east, crowning the further heights, the camps, occupied by the Belgic invaders, in their progress to the Severn, still seemed to awe the surrounding country; whilst a series of barrows terminated the view, until their forms were lost in the distance. But the most interesting sight remained. On the left, surmounting the towers and lesser spires, the houses, and smoke of the city of the living, shone the aerial spire of the cathedral of New Sarum, with the morning sun on its elfin shaft. No human creature was in sight, save some poor women gathering sticks among the thorns of the ramparts. A few sheep were bleating in the fosse. The rivers Nadder and Avon were seen tranquilly meandering in the nether vale; whilst the solitary tree, in an adjoining meadow, under which for centuries the burgesses for this ancient city had been elected—now with its bare trunk seemed to resemble its fortune, one branch only remaining."

SCARBOROUGH, NORTH RIDING, YORK, a parish, borough, market town, and seaport, in the east division of the wapentake of Pickering lythe, union of Scarborough: it comprises the townships of Scarborough and Falsgrave: 252 miles from London (coach road 218), 20 from Whitby. Gt. Nor. Rail. through Peterborough, Lincoln, and York, to Scarborough station: from Derby, through York, &c., 110 miles. Money orders issued at Scarborough: London letters deliv^d. 10½ a.m.: post closes 3.40 p.m.—The origin of the name of Scarborough has never been satisfactorily ascertained, but it is generally believed, by scientific philologists, to have been derived from the Saxon, Scar, a rock, and burgh, a town, or rather fortified place; but no reference to it is made in the Domesday Survey—and the earliest authentic record, therefore, is that contained in a charter granted by Henry II., and in that given by Henry III., for making a pier in Scardeburch, as it was at that time called. Prior, however, to the construction of the pier, the town rose into importance, and was defended by walls and a fosse, of which some remains are still visible. In the time of King Stephen, a castle was built here by William le Grose, Earl of Arundel, in which Piers Gaveston, the favourite of Edward II., afterwards took refuge, and held it for a long time against the confederate barons, only surrendering indeed from compulsion, caused by the want of provisions. During the parliamentary war, the castle was besieged by Sir John Meldrum, but was bravely defended, and for more than twelve months held by Sir Hugh Cholmondeley, its governor, until he was obliged to surrender from the want of food and of military stores. It was subsequently obtained for that king by Colonel Boynton, but was afterwards surrendered to the parliament, by whose authority it was dismantled. The town is delightfully situated on a bold out-lying rock, overlooking the German Ocean, and surrounded by scenery of diversified and remarkably romantic character. The bay laid out before it is one of those open notches, skirted by a sandy beach, which just gives the notion of air and freedom. From the margin of the water the land rises in a gradual but speedy ascent, forming a sort of amphitheatre, from which the most delightful views can be obtained, embracing the sea, the shore, the land, the castle, and the town with all its various adjuncts. One of the principal ornaments of the town is the Cliff bridge, of four cast-iron arches, resting on pyramidal piers, which, being 75 feet above high water mark, forms a most delightful promenade. On the northern side of the bridge there is an elegant domed edifice, built for the purposes of the local Literary and Philosophical Society. The beach is exceedingly fine, and Scarborough has consequently always been a favourite summer resort. Of course every appliance has been provided for visitors where wealth and elegance are needed. Baths, news-rooms, card-rooms, and all the means of enjoyment, may be had in abundance. This is the chief feature of Scarborough, but its port is also worthy of consideration, for it is considered one of the safest roadsteads on the coast. The marine trade is therefore considerable, and vessels of large burden have been built here; and ropes, sailcloth, and the other mercantile articles, are manufactured on a somewhat large scale. Many of the lower class of the inhabitants are fishermen, and the market is held upon the Sands. SCILLY ISLANDS, a numerous group, situated at the western entrance to the English Channel: 325 miles from London, 40 from Penzance, 27 from Land's End. — Money orders issued at Penzance: London letters deliv^d 5½ p.m.: post closes 6½ a.m. — The number of islands, according to Dr. Borlase, is 140. Their ancient name is supposed to have been Sylleh, i. e. flat rocks, dedicated to the sun. They were known to the Greeks and Romans under the name of the Cassiterides, or tin islands. It has been traditionally alleged, that anciently a tract of land intervened between these isles and the present shore of the mainland of Cornwall — (see article CORNWALL.) The most important of the Scilly Isles are St. MARY'S, TRESCO, St. MARTIN'S, BREHAR — (see these articles). — St. Agnes, and Sampson. The island of St. Agnes is about one mile south-west of St. Mary's. It possesses a small church, in which service is performed by a minister appointed by the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge. A daily school, in connection with this society, contains fifty children. Here are also two infant schools, supported by subscription. The island is very fertile, pleasant, and well cultivated. An elevated and strong light-house has been erected on it; the rocks here being numerous and dangerous. Sampson island is composed of two circular hills, connected by a low rocky ledge. On the summit of one of the hills are several barrows, and on the other, various ruins of houses. At Hugh-Town, St. Mary's, a new church has recently been erected at a cost of £1,500. It is a handsome structure in the Gothic style, built of the granite of the island, with a tower, nearly 100 feet long, and 45 feet broad, finished and fitted up without any closed pews, in a way well adapted to the simple habits of the people for whose accommodation it is designed. It is calculated to accommodate 500 persons. The minister is appointed by nomination of the lessee, and recently had not received any license from the bishop. His duties extend over all the islands; but there are also two missionaries, who have been for a long period maintained on the islands by the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge. The Isles of Scilly, by an order of Her Majesty in council, of 30th July, 1838, under the authority of a late act of parliament, are declared to be within the jurisdiction of the Bishop of Exeter, and the Archdeacon of Cornwall. The Wesleyan Methodists have places of worship in the islands. The inhabitants are principally engaged in agriculture, in fishing, and in the manufacture of kelp. Potatoes, barley, pease, and oats, are chiefly cultivated: cattle are fed in most of the islands. In the passage from Penzance, between which place and the Isles of Scilly there are regular packets, lies a dangerous ledge of rocks called the Wolf. Other rocks, named the Bucks, the Rennel, and the Leven Stones, also impede the navigation; but a floating-light vessel has been recently stationed near the latter by the Trinity House. Two bright fixed lights are shown nightly from sunset to sunrise: one on the mainmast, burning at an elevation of 38 feet from the surface of the water, and one on the foremast, burning at an elevation of 20 feet above the same level. A court of twelve persons, appointed to manage the civil government of the islands, generally sits monthly at St. Mary's, for the trial of suits, &c. Persons accused of felonies are sent to be tried at the assizes for the county of Cornwall. In 1645, these islands were held for Charles I., and in 1649 fortified by the then governor, Sir John Grenville, for Charles II., but taken possession of by Admiral Blake, in the following year, for the parliament. It was on a reef of these islands, called Gilston Rock, or more commonly the Bishop and his Clerks, that Sir Cloudesley Shovel, returning from the Mediterranean, was, with three line-of-battle ships, wrecked and totally lost, October 22, 1707. — Contains 5,770 acres: 521 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 2,582.

of earthwork, which were evidently the construction of the ancient Britons, the most important being called "Castle Damps," or "Double Dykes." Towards the south-east there is a series of conical mounds, which to this very time retain the appellation of the "Beacon Hills," and they extend not only over this, but also over the adjoining parishes. Each is about half a mile from the other, and they are all about ninety yards in circumference. There is also a British mound in the village, where the Bardic fires are supposed to have been kindled; and the custom of doing the same thing has been continued even until this day.---The living (the Holy Cross), a disch^d. vicarage in the archd^y. and diocese of Lincoln, is valued at £8: pres. net income, £185: patron, Bishop of Lincoln: pres. incumbent, George Oliver, 1831: contains 3,190 acres: 58 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 388: ass^d. prop^r. £2,192: poor rates in 1848, £130. 15s. SCRIVEN WITH TENTERGATE, WEST RIDING, YORK, a township in the parish of Knaresborough—(which see for access, &c.): 203 miles from London, 1 from Knaresborough, 5 from Ripley.—Money orders issued at Knaresborough: London letters deliv^d 10½ a.m.: post closes 3¼ p.m.—Here are a Dissenting chapel, and a day and boarding-school. Near the village is an eminence called Coning-Garth, or King's-Garth. This piece of ground is about 600 yards in length, and 200 in breadth, nearly encompassed on three sides by a precipice; and on the remaining part, the precipice is supplied by various terraces cut in the side of the hill, rising above each other,—a mode of fortification very common amongst the northern nations in ancient times. The name of the hill, and its form and situation, render it very probable that here some Saxon monarch with his army was formerly encamped. At a small distance is a piece of ground called Market Flat, probably the place where provisions were brought to supply the camp. But it is also probable, or rather we should say, more than probable, that this is the place where the Saxons had been accustomed to assemble for the supply of their weekly provisions. But there is a further probability, that it was the place of the Wittenagomote, and one of the birth-places of British freedom.—Contains 1,340 acres: 323 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 1,435: probable popⁿ in 1849, 1,650: ass^d prop^r £3,930: poor rates in 1848, £556. 15s. Seaford was at one time a large and flourishing town, but was burnt down in one of the descents of the French upon these coasts, and had to suffer the still greater misfortune of the retirement of the sea, in consequence of which it never recovered its former importance, but has ever since continued to be little more than a fishing village. Most of the inhabitants are therefore fishermen, but the place has grown into consideration from having been frequented for the purposes of sea-bathing. Seaford was first incorporated by Henry VIII., but the borough has not been included in any of the schedules of the Municipal Act. It formerly sent two members to parliament, but was disfranchised by the parliamentary Reform Act.---The living is a vicarage, annexed to that of Sutton: contains 1,870 acres: 188 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 953: ass^d. prop^r £3,507: poor rates in 1848, £648. 9s.---Fairs: March 15, and July 25.---Old Tree Inn, and New Inn.

The other charities produce about £14 a year. The Baptists have a chapel here. — The living, a rectory in the diocese of Peterborough, is valued at £17. 8s. 11½d.: pres. net income, £950: patron, Sir T. Gresley, Bart.: pres. incumbent, J. M. Gresley, 1847: contains 4,530 acres: 245 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 1,281: probable popⁿ in 1849, 1,473: ass^d prop^r £8,328: poor rates in 1848, £584. 14s. — The Hall is the seat of Sir Roger Gresley, Bart., the representative of an ancient family, which traces its descent from Malahulchius, uncle to Rollo, the renowned ancestor of William the Conqueror. William, younger son of Roger de Todanise, standard-bearer of Malahulchius, arrived in England with an elder brother, Robert, who was ancestor of the noble race of Stafford, in the train of him who became the first king of England of the Norman line. At the time of the Doomsday survey, they held extensive possessions in the county of Derby, of which the manor of Grasley, or Gresley, was one. There he fixed his abode, and left a son called Nigell. He also left a son, called William Fitz-Nigell, surnamed "De Gresley," who was founder of the castle and monastery of Gresley, to the honour of St. George. His son, Robert de Gresley, in 1134, founded an abbey of Cistercian monks at Swineshead, in Lincolnshire, and from him was descended, through a long line of distinguished ancestors, Sir William Gresley, Knt., who was present at the coronation of Anne Boleyn in 1533, and served the office of high sheriff of Staffordshire in the fourth year of Queen Elizabeth's reign. His son, George Gresley, Esq. of Drake-low, was created a baronet in the year 1611. From him the present baronet is a lineal descendant. — Adjoining is the residence of Sir George Hewett, Bart., one of whose ancestors was high sheriff of Leicestershire in 1647, and several of whose family have been distinguished officers in the army.

It consists principally of three streets, with a large market-square in the centre. The church is a large and very handsome structure. The surrounding country is exceedingly pleasing, and in the highest state of cultivation. The Wesleyan Methodists and the Roman Catholics have places of worship here. Two of the schools have small endowments; the other charities produce about £230 a year, part of which is applied in apprenticing poor children. The Sedgfield poor-law union comprises three parishes, with a population of about 5,500 persons, spread over an area of sixty-three square miles. A remarkable ice-storm occurred here on the 17th of July, 1792, between the hours of eleven and one, being preceded by a darkness almost as intense as that of night, when the streets were filled with rugged pieces of ice to almost the depth of two feet, varying in size from that of a marble to the bigness of a man's head. Of course all the windows and all the corn exposed to its violence were destroyed; the trees were stripped of their leaves; the birds were killed; the cattle, frightened by the violence of the tempest, broke from their pastures, and fled in terror through the country to the houses and the stables for shelter. The origin of the storm appears to have been electrical. — The living (St. Edmund the Bishop), a rectory in the archd^y and diocese of Durham, is valued at £73. 18s. 1¾d.: pres. net income, £1,802: patron, Bishop of Dur-

Mr. Gilbert, the author of that most pleasing work, the Natural History of Selborne, was for many years the vicar of this parish. The living (Virgin Mary), a vicarage in the archd^y and diocese of Winchester, is valued at £8. 2s. 1d.: patron, Magdalen College, Oxford: pres. incumbent, F. J. Parsons, 1842: contains 4,410 acres: 128 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 1,052: ass^d prop^y £4,324: poor rates in 1848, £470. 17s. Fair, May 29.

SELBY, WEST RIDING, YORK, a parish and market town, partly in the liberty of St. Peter of York, and partly in the lower division of the wapentake of Barkstone-Ash, union of Selby, on the river Ouse: 213 miles from London (coach road 181), 14 from York. Nor. West. Rail. through Rugby, Derby, and Normanton, to Selby station: from Derby, through Normanton, &c., 81 miles. Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7½ a.m.: post closes 6½ p.m. and 9½ p.m. Over the river Ouse there is a swivel-bridge of timber, of seventy tons weight, worked upon large balls like cannon balls, upon which it is sometimes made to revolve with great rapidity. The parish is also intersected by a short canal, which connects the Ouse with the Aire and Calder navigation, and Selby consequently enjoys great advantages in the way of communication by railway with Leeds and Hull, and through them and other places with all parts of the kingdom. The town is well built, paved, and lighted, has a fine Gothic market-cross, and a pleasing town-hall. There was formerly a splendid Benedictine monastery here, founded in 1069 by William the Conqueror, to the honour of St. Mary and St. German, the inhabitants of which, in a short time, acquired such wealth and immunities, as rendered the establishment equal in rank almost to that of St. Peter at York, its principal, with that of St. Mary's in that city, being the only mitred abbots north of the Trent. Its revenues, at the general dissolution of monasteries, were estimated at £819 a year; and in this abbey Henry I. was born. The present church of the town was the conventual church of the institution, and is the only remnant of one of the most magnificent structures in the kingdom. Here are an Independent chapel, formed in 1810; a Presbyterian, prior to 1707; a Wesleyan Methodist, in 1817; and places of worship for the Calvinistic Methodists, Society of Friends, Roman Catholics, and Unitarians. The Blue-coat Charity, or Amicable Society, was established by contributions among the inhabitants of Selby, and is supported chiefly by voluntary subscriptions, the original object of it being "to provide clothing and instruction for twenty blue-coat boys, and such other number as the funds will admit of." In 1833, forty-three boys were under instruction on the foundation, thirty-one of whom were clothed at an expense of £62 per annum; the remainder of the income of the society, namely, £45. 17s., being paid to the schoolmaster for the instruction of the boys. By a bequest of Mr. Chamberlain, consisting of a house for the master and £12 per annum, twenty children are educated at another school here; and at a third, £35 per annum are devoted to the education of fifty children. In the High or Church school, supported mainly by the proceeds of the various charitable bequests (Blue-coat Charity, Brown-coat Charity, Feoffees', Foster's, &c.), forty-nine boys receive free instruction, thirty-six of whom are also clothed. The guaranteed income of the master is £60. The estate of the "Feoffees for pious and charitable uses," yields annually about £232. This sum is expended on education, repairs of the church, relief of the poor, and repair of the highways, at the discretion of the feoffees. Other charities, £24 per annum. Vessels of considerable burthen come up to Selby, and can now clear out there at a branch custom-house, without going to Hull, as was formerly necessary. Steamboats ply constantly between this place and Hull. The living is a perpetual curacy in the diocese of York: returned annual income, £97: patron, Hon. Mrs. Petre, lady of the manor: pres. incumbent, (by lapse to the University of Cambridge,) F. W. Harper, 1850: contains 3,180 acres: 959 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 5,376: probable popⁿ in 1849, 6,182: ass^d prop^y £9,723: poor rates in 1848, £1,883. 17s. Market day, Monday. The village, which consists principally of one long street, is very neatly built, and most of the inhabitants are fishermen. Selsey town is now only about half a mile from the sea, though it is said to have once been near the centre of the peninsula. The first monastery in Sussex, after the establishment of Christianity in England, was founded here, about the year 681, by St. Wilfrid, who preached to the South Saxons, and obtained from Edilwach, king of the country, a grant of the peninsula and all the buildings upon it, for the purpose of endowing a religious institution for those persons who had been his companions in exile. It was dedicated to the Blessed Virgin; and its abbot, Eadbercht, being in 711 consecrated bishop of the South Saxons, fixed his see here, and it remained till Bishop Stigand, in 1075, transferred it to the larger see of Chichester. Of the cathedral and episcopal residence there are now no remains, and the park has been engulfed by the sea, and is now an anchorage for fishermen. Selsey church, which has a nave, chancel, and two aisles, is a fine edifice of the fourteenth century, and has lately been much improved. A court-baron is held here annually. Off the coast there is an extensive fishery of lobsters, crabs, cockles, and prawns, most of which are sent to the London markets.---The living (St. Peter), a rectory and disch^d vicarage in the archd^y. and diocese of Chichester, is valued at £19. 3s. 4d.: pres. net income, £759: patron, Bishop of Chichester: pres. incumbent, Burre Phipps, 1817: contains 2,880 acres: 128 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 879: ass^d prop^r £3,283: poor rates in 1848, £368. 1s.

Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 11 a.m.: post closes 2.25 p.m. The situation of Settle, though somewhat singular, is very pleasant. It stands close to the base of an almost perpendicular limestone rock, above 300 feet high, which overhangs on the north side in the most awful manner. From the summit there is a beautiful view of the vale below, with its long ranges of craggy mountains on each side, forming a striking contrast, and exhibiting a curious mixture of grey rock and luxuriant verdure. Pendlehill on the south, Pennigant to the north, and Ingleborough towards the north-west, are full in sight, rearing their lofty heads above all the neighbouring hills, and often having their towering summits enveloped in black clouds or foamy mists. On the south a beautiful vale displays an extensive, rich, and picturesque landscape,—the views on the one hand being extremely delightful, and on the other singularly striking and grand. The town is well built, and the inhabitants are abundantly supplied with water. The manufacture of cotton is their principal employment. A constable is appointed annually at a court-baron held by the lord of the manor. Craven and W. Morris, Esqrs.: pres. incumbent, E. Ellerton, 1825: contains 2,600 acres: 97 houses: popⁿ. in 1841, 471: ass^d. prop^r. £2,941: poor rates in 1848, £91. 19s. Tithes commuted in 1814. — Brockhampton Park, a fine domain on the Cotswold hills, and once the residence of Sir Walter Raleigh, is now the seat of Fulwer Craven, Esq. This gentleman is a descendant of Charles Craven, Esq., youngest brother of William, second Lord Craven, who was governor of Carolina in the reign of Queen Anne. On this estate is the most distant source of the river Thames, in a ground near the park called "Isiswell." The largest walnut tree in England grows in the park.

SEVENHAMPTON, WILTS, a chapelry in the parish of Highworth—(which see for access, &c.): 76 miles from London, 2 from Highworth, 6 from Swindon. — Money orders issued at Highworth: London letters deliv^d. 7½ a.m.: post closes 6 p.m. — The living is a curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Highworth: contains 48 houses: popⁿ. in 1841, 254. — (Other returns with the parish.)

SEVEN-OAKS, CHESTER, a township in the parish of Great Budworth—(which see for access, &c.): 178 miles from London, 4 from Northwich, 7 from Warrington. — Money orders issued at Northwich: London letters deliv^d. 8 a.m.: post closes 7½ p.m. — Contains 760 acres: 25 houses: popⁿ. in 1841, 149: poor rates in 1848, £95. 10s.

SEVEN-OAKS, KENT, a parish and market town in the hund^d. of Codsh Heath, lathe of Sutton-at-Hone, union of Seven-Oaks, near the river Darent, on the post road to Hastings: the parish comprises the liberties of Riverhead and Weald: 40 miles from London (coach road 23), 7 from Tunbridge. — Sou. East. Rail. to Edenbridge station, thence 8 miles: from Derby, through London, &c., 172 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 7 a.m. and 3 p.m.: post closes 10.25 a.m. and 7½ p.m. — The town is situated upon a ridge of eminences, on one of which seven large oaks formerly stood, from whence the name of the place has been derived. It consists principally of two streets, and contains a number of neat and tasteful residences. In the High Street of the town stands the ancient market-house, where the petty sessions for the lathe of Sutton-at-Hone are held. Two chapels of ease have been erected in the liberties of Riverhead and Weald. Riverhead chapel is a curacy; gross income, £45; patron, the Vicar. Weald chapel is a perpetual curacy; gross income, £100: patrons, Earl Amherst and M. Lambard, Esq. Here are two Baptist churches, one formed in 1820; and a Wesleyan Methodist, formed in 1802. There are fourteen daily schools. A free grammar-school was founded here, and endowed, in 1431, by Sir William Rumpstead, or Sennocke, a foundling brought up in this town upon charity, and apprenticed to a grocer in London, of which he had afterwards the honour of being lord mayor, ultimately attaining to the dignity of knighthood. This school has two exhibitions of £15 per annum each. The master has about £50 per annum and a house, on which, in 1833, he paid taxes amounting to nearly £30 per annum; there are eleven boys on the foundation. Apprentices are occasionally bound with a fee of £12 each. A school for educating the children of the poor was founded and endowed in 1675, by Lady Margaret Boswell, the annual income of which arises principally from a farm in Essex belonging to the charity. From 200 to 300 children of both sexes are educated upon the national system, in the schools established on this foundation. The founder of the grammar-school also founded almshouses, in which 32 decayed householders are maintained, and from which an allowance is made to 16 out-pensioners. The sums applied exclusively for the almshouses, amounted, in 1836, to £567. 3s. 8d. Each inmate has two rooms and fuel, with 3s. 6d. a week; out-pensioners, 3s. a week. Besides £98. 15s. applied exclusively for the school, a sum of £89. 7s. 11½d. was expended in 1836 for other purposes of the founder's general charity. Eight cottages, erected by Multon Lambard, Esq., together with adjoining ground and premises, were given by that gentleman, in 1833, as residences for the out-pensioners of the preceding charity. Other charities, in 1836, £45. 19s. 10d., besides 40 imperial bushels of the best wheat-bread corn annually, the gift of Sir Henry Fermor, to as many poor people not receiving alms. The inns are all good, but attached to the Royal Crown Hotel there are some extensive gardens, most tastefully laid out, which command beautiful views of Kippington Park, the seat of Colonel Austen, the church, and the pleasingly diversified country towards the south-west of the town, as well as of Montreal House, the other seat of Lord Amherst, and the Earl of Stanhope's residence at Chevening. Around the town the villas of the resident gentry are very numerous, and many of them are very pleasing residences; but the chief attraction of the place is Knowle House, the magnificent residence of Earl Amherst. The front of the mansion presents two lofty embattled towers, which guard the gate of the entrance in the middle, and on either side are spacious wings pierced with three stories of windows. The parts are plain, but the whole is imposing. This character generally pervades the mansion. The principal buildings, in addition to the two fronts with their embattled gateways, are in the form of a large quadrangle, with a smaller one behind, relieved in the mass by numerous square towers, the architecture being chiefly in the castellated style. In the quadrangle are casts from the Gladiator and the Venus. The lofty and extensive Gothic hall has a very characteristic table for the old English game of shuttle-board, a richly-carved screen, a raised dais, and stained window-glass. The park, which comprises an area of above five miles in circumference, well stocked with deer, is distinguished for the richness of its turf and the stately grandeur of its oaks, its chestnuts, and its beeches. It is laid out with great taste, and is a favourite resort of the inhabitants and visitors of Seven-Oaks. A pedigree, which is extant, deduces the family of the noble Earl from the Saxon era, and Hammo de Heerst is mentioned by Philipot as flourishing in the second year of Edward III. In the next reign, that of Richard II., the family had acquired their present designation of Amherst, as appears by the record of Collins. One of the members of this ancient family became sergeant-at-law to Queen Elizabeth; and from his father, Richard Amherst, Esq., who left three sons, was descended Jeffery Amherst, Esq., who, having acquired great reputation as the military commander-in-chief in America, from 1758 to 1764, was made a knight of the Bath, and elevated to the peerage in 1776, by the title of Baron Amherst of Holmesdale, in the county of Kent. In 1778 his lordship was constituted Baron Amherst of Montreal, with remainder to his nephew, William Pitt Amherst, Esq. His lordship received a marshal's baton in 1796, but died in 1797, when his first baronetcy expired, but the other devolved according to the remainder upon his nephew, the present peer, who was for some time Governor-General of India, and was elevated to the earldom in 1826. His lordship is also a G.C.H. and a privy councillor. The living (St. Nicholas) is a vicarage and sinecure rectory in the diocese of Canterbury; the former is valued at £15. 3s. 1½d., the latter at £13. 6s. 8d.: pres. net income of the former, £306, of the latter, £629: patron, Rev. SHAFTESBURY (or SHASTON), DORSET, a borough and market town in the union of Shaftesbury, Shaston-west division of the county: 130 miles from London (coach road 101), 12 from Blandford. — Gt. West. Rail. through Chippenham to Frome, thence 15 miles: from Derby, through Birmingham and Frome, 189 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 8 a.m.: post closes 6 p.m. — The town of Shaftesbury is of very ancient origin, being supposed by some to have had an existence even before the descent of the Romans; but although there might have been a congregation of British dwellings on the site, nothing like a town could then have existed. By the Britons it was called Caer Paladur, a name derived from the shaft-like hill, rising almost to a point, on which it is situated. Some authors assert that it was built by Rhudubracius, or Cicuber, king of the Britons, who flourished 940 years before the Christian era, a notion which it requires a large share of credulity to entertain; but Hollinshed says that it was built by Lud, son of Leil, eighth king of the Britons, who lived in the year 50, before our Saviour's birth. Camden, however, with more reason, shows, not perhaps that it was built, but that it was constituted a town, by Alfred the Great, about the year 880; and this, he observes, is evinced by an ancient inscription, stated by William of Malmesbury to have been removed in his time out of the ruins of the walls into the chapter-house of the nuns. It ran as follows:

"Anno Dominice Incarnationis, Alfredus Rex
fecit hanc urbem dcccxxx.
Regni sui viii."

Or,

"King Alfred built this city in the year of our Lord 880, and in the eighth year of his reign."

In ancient times, Shaftesbury was much resorted to, and in fact derived almost all its splendour from its celebrated monastery, situated on the south side of the present churchyard of Trinity parish, which was founded by Alfred, who made his daughter, Ethelgeda, the first abbess, and the charter of which is still extant, although scarcely a vestige of the conventual buildings remains. This nunnery, which was of the Benedictine order, was the richest and best endowed in England, occupied a great extent of ground, and had a vast number of offices and apartments within its precincts. Its abbess was one of the four who held a whole barony, in consequence of which she was liable to be called to parliament, but was excused on account of her sex; the writs of summons, however, that were issued, required her to send her due quota of men into the field, according to her knight's fees. Edward the Martyr was buried here, and amongst the pilgrims to this then considered miraculous shrine, was King Canute the Dane, who died here. The revenues of the abbey or nunnery at the dissolution were estimated at £1,329. 1s. 3d. per annum. Besides the nunnery, there were anciently twelve churches in Shaftesbury, several chantries, and an hospital dedicated to St. John the Baptist. There are now only those of Holy Trinity with St. Peter's, St. Rumbold's, and St. James's. The living of Holy Trinity, which is united with the rectory of St. Peter, and also comprises St. Martin's and St. Lawrence, is rated at £11. 10s. 2½d., that of St. Peter's at £4. 1s. 10½d.; returned together at £140; gross income, £168; patron in 1851, Earl of Shaftesbury: the Rev. Thos. Stanton, M.A., is the rector. The living of St. James is a rectory, rated at £1. 11s. ½d.; gross income, £289; patron in 1851, Earl of Shaftesbury. Shaftesbury has an interesting aspect, for most of the houses are built of stone, quarried in the vicinity. Till lately, water has been scarce; but waterworks are now erecting at a great cost by the Marquis of Westminster, who owns most of the property in the town. Beside the usual domestic trading of small towns, there used to be a manufacture of shirt buttons carried on here, which employed a number of women and children; but that, like other similar businesses carried on in rural districts, has been absorbed by the manufacturing towns. The sum of £35 for ship-money was imposed upon Shaftesbury. The Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Quakers, all have chapels here. In one of the daily schools here, twenty scholars are educated, clothed, and apprenticed, from the proceeds of an endowment by William Lush in 1718, yielding £229. 10s. per annum, besides a house for the master. Spiller's almshouses were founded in 1642 for ten poor old men, and rebuilt in 1830 at an expense of £470, of which £400 were presented by the corporation; income in 1836, £127. 2s. Chubb's almshouses for poor women were established in 1611, and rebuilt in 1834, for the accommodation of sixteen inmates, at an expense of £500; income in 1836, £54. From Williams' charity for apprenticing poor boys, and for behoof of clothiers, serge-makers, linen-weavers, stuff-makers, and felt-makers, and for other purposes, four hatters and weavers, in 1850, received £8 each, the largest sum allowed; eighteen pensioners, all widows, received an annuity of £5 each, and a residue of £54 was left with the mayor of the town for distribution. Other charitable endowments are the church lands of St. James, yielding £8 per annum; of Holy Trinity, yielding various small and mostly nominal rents, with fines to a considerable amount on renewal. Minor charities about £35 per annum. Shaftesbury was described as a borough in Domesday-book, though it does not appear to have become a corporate town before the reign of James I. Under the Municipal Act, the borough is governed by four aldermen and twelve councillors, under the usual corporate style. The old parliamentary boundaries coincided with the municipal; and, previous to the Reform Act, Shaftesbury returned two members to parliament, but now only sends one. The boundaries now include the old borough of Shaftesbury, the several out-parishes of Holy Trinity, St. James, and St. Peter, the parishes of Cann, St. Rumbold, Motcomb, East Stower, Stower Provost, Todbers, Melbury Abbas, Compton Abbas, Donhead St. Mary, St. Margaret's Marsh, and the chapelry of Hartgrove. Shaftesbury is also a polling-place for the county. Contains 2,400 acres: 516 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 3,170: probable popⁿ in 1849, Rail. to Guildford, thence 1 mile: from Derby, through London, &c., 165 miles. — Money orders issued at Guildford: London letters deliv^d 7½ a.m.: post closes 9 p.m. — The village and the greater part of the parish has been in possession of the Austen family ever since 1599; and the then representative of it rebuilt the church in 1789, and to his memory it contains an elegant mural monument by Bacon. That gentleman also presented the painted window at the east end of the church, which represents the "Ascension," after a picture by Carlo Dolce. The Wey and Arun Canal runs through the parish. — The living (the Virgin Mary), a disch^d vicarage in the archd^y of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester, is valued at £8. 4s. 7½d.: pres. net income, £330: patron, Lord Chancellor: contains 2,790 acres: 179 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 996: ass^d. prop^y £4,177: poor rates in 1848, £371. 16s. — Fair, Oct. 2. — Shalford Hall, a fine old mansion, built by John Austen, brother of George Austen, M.P. for Guildford in 1600, is the seat of Sir Henry Austen, Knt. The mansion was erected in the reigns of Queen Elizabeth and James I. on the site of an older mansion, but a carved oak chimney-piece, with the arms of various impalements, is now the only vestige remaining of its antiquity, for the house was modernised about the year 1760. The mansion contains a remarkably fine collection of pictures, many of them by the first of the old masters, including Rubens, Teniers, Annibal Carracci, Poussin, Vendermeulen, and others, besides many others of the modern school by Fielding, Elmer, Moucheron, Kneller, Dance, &c. The grounds adjoining the house are fine, and beautifully embellished.

—Shap is a long irregularly-built village, on the great road which formerly led from Liverpool and Manchester to Carlisle. One of the schools here is endowed with £25 per annum; the other charities produce about £22 per annum. The Spa, situated about three miles from the village, has become a place of fashionable resort; and a large hotel, with stables and every other accommodation, has within these few years been erected by the Earl of Lonsdale for the visitors. The water is chiefly of sulphuric quality, and has been found to be highly beneficial in the removal, especially, of scorbutic complaints. Formerly there was, a little south of the village, a temple of the Druids; but about thirty years ago, when the waste or common lands were enclosed by act of parliament, most of the stones composing it were blown into fragments by gunpowder, and employed by the inhabitants in the erection of rude stone fences. This remnant of antiquity consisted of two rows of huge stones, differing materially in size; for the largest were 10 or 11 feet high, and of nearly the same thickness, while the smaller ones were not half these dimensions. The two rows were not quite parallel, the distance apart varying from 20 to something over 30 yards; while the distance between the stones for the most part was 10 or 12 yards, the entire length of the rows being a little more than half a mile. At the upper end of this remarkable parallelogram, there was a rude circle of middling-sized stones, —in all probability the place of sacrifice. The quality of these stones is a species of reddish granite, full of large white shining specks of spar-like appearance. When polished, some of them are veined, and have an ornamental appearance. There is no regularity in their shape, and few of them present sharp angles; indeed, for the most part, they seem, from their rounded forms, to have been long subjected to the action of water. Shap Abbey, founded in the early part of the twelfth century, stands in a lonely vale, a mile west of the village. At the dissolution it contained twenty monks, and its revenues were valued at £166. 10s. 6d. per annum. The tower of the church is nearly all that remains of this ancient monastic establishment. —The living (St. Michael), a disch^d. vicarage in the archd^y and diocese of Carlisle, is valued at £8. 15s. 7d.: pres. net income, £73: patron, Earl of Lonsdale: pres. incumbent, J. SHEERNESS, KENT, a villa and seaport in the parish of Minster-in-Sheppey: 48 miles from London, 18 from Chatham, 20 from Gravesend.---Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 7 a.m. and 6 p.m.: post closes 7 p.m. and 8½ a.m.---From the facilities afforded by its remarkably fine beach, and in consequence of its agreeable aspect, Sheerness has become a great resort for sea-bathing. The beach is a delightful promenade, and all the appliances have been provided to render the place one of most pleasing sojourn. There are hot and cold baths, and several most commodious hotels and lodging-houses. Sheerness consists of three different but united portions, called Bluetown, Banktown, and Miletown. Bluetown, previous to 1815, was much larger than it now is, but a great many houses were necessarily destroyed in forming the docks. Banktown is the new and best part of the town, having many handsome houses, and several very regularly built streets. Miletown is the largest of the three towns, consisting chiefly of one long street. The inhabitants at one time suffered much from the want of water, but a number of wells were dug in the three towns, and now they are well supplied with that necessary article. The streets are mostly well paved and lighted with gas. The dockyard, which has of late years been greatly enlarged and improved, at an outlay of nearly £3,000,000 sterling, is the principal object of attraction at Sheerness, and is now certainly one of the finest in Europe. It lies at the north-western point of the isle, facing the water between it and the town of Sheerness, at the confluence of the Medway and the West Swale, and the river Thames. The form of the dockyard resembles that of a triangle, having its base, which is next the water, perfect; but its two sides irregularly described. Its area is 59 acres, 1 rood, and 26 perches; and it is surrounded by a brick wall crowned with stone, about 24 feet high, except at the side which abuts on the water. The foundation for the several buildings in it was formed by driving 99,000 piles. This dockyard was originally intended for the reception and repairing of ships partially damaged, and for building frigates of small burthen. It has been much improved since the year 1815, and contains three basins, one of which, the largest, is on a scale of magnitude to admit men-of-war of the first rate, without previously landing their guns or stores, or any part of their equipment. This basin is 520 feet long, and 300 feet broad, with an entrance of 60 feet, and a sufficient depth to prevent the ships grounding. It will hold six first-class ships at one time. The middle basin is 250 feet by 200, having an entrance of 49 feet. The other, or northern basin, is 282 feet 6 inches, by 200 feet 6 inches, with an entrance of 102 feet. There are three dry docks, 248 feet long, 88 feet wide, and 30 feet deep, having entrances 57 feet wide. These compose what is called the southern basin. There is also a frigate dock 207 feet in length, 75 feet in breadth, and 19 feet 9 inches in depth; the entrance to it is 57 feet in width. This is, properly speaking, a fitting dockyard. Its storehouse is six stories high, and capable of holding 30,000 tons of naval stores. There are numerous sheds and workshops, as well as offices and residences for the chiefs of the various departments, police-stations, and a military guard-house. In some new buildings, the process of making cement from a mineral substance collected on the coast of Kent is carried on. There were recently between 800 and 900 men employed in this dockyard, and more were still required. The whole process of docking, undocking, cleansing, examining the bottom, and repairing the copper of a first-rate of 120 guns, with all standing, has been here completed in the short space of twenty-four hours, and, if necessary, this can be accomplished even in less time. Immediately abutting on the north-western corner of the dockyard, and outside its wall, is Garrison-point, where a fine mansion has been built for the port-admiral. Near it there is an elevated platform, with a telegraph and a coast-guard, barracks for the military doing duty in the port, with a fort upon the water's edge, originally built in the time of Charles II. to resist the incursions of the Dutch. The garrison contains commodious residences for military officers, and barracks for the men, forming a square with a large area, which is called the Parade. It is under the command of a governor-general and a lieutenant-governor. There is also a fort-major and a resident surgeon. In addition to the coast-guard stationed here, there are others at East-end, Hensbrook, and Queenborough, on shore, besides some old ships at convenient points appropriated to the service, making, in all, six coast-guard stations, supplied with a competent number of men, under the command of an inspecting commander and four lieutenants. A new church was erected in Miletown in 1836, chiefly through public subscriptions. At the upper end of Bluetown is the chapel for the dockyard, and close to its precincts. In a place with such a numerous population as that of Sheerness, there are of course several dissenting chapels, and among them one for the Roman Catholics. A Mechanics' Institution has been established in Miletown, and during the winter season lectures on literary and scientific topics are delivered for the benefit of the members. The prospects from the cliffs in the neighbourhood of Sheerness, and over which the road runs to Minster, commands many views of some of the finest scenery in England. The Isle of Grain, the mouths of the Medway and Thames, Southend on the opposite side, the other parts of the Essex coast, and the deep searching look into the North Sea, all come within the panoramic prospect. The living (Trinity) is a perpetual curacy in the diocese of Canterbury: patron, Incumbent of Minster: pres. incumbent, George Bryant, 1845. Founttain and Ship Inns; Royal and Wellington Hotels.

SHEET, HANTS, a tithing on the west bank of the Rother, in the parish of Petersfield: 53 miles from London, 1 from Petersfield, 9 from Midhurst. Money orders issued at Petersfield: London letters deliv^d. 7½ a.m.: post closes 8 p.m. Contains 1,850 acres: 68 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 390: ass^d. prop^r. £2,514: poor rates in 1848, £133. 17s.

SHEFFIELD, WEST RIDING, YORK, a parish and celebrated town in the district of Hallamshire, upper division of the wapentake of Strafforth and Tickhill, union of Sheffield: the parish comprises the townships of Attercliffe with Darnal, Brightside-Bierlow, Eccleashall-Bierlow, Nether Hallam, Upper Hallam, and Sheffield: 177 miles from London (coach road 161), 32 from Leeds, 41 from Manchester. Nor. West. Rail. through Rugby and Derby to Sheffield station: from Derby, through Chesterfield, 45 miles. Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 7½ a.m. and 6½ p.m.: post closes 7.40 p.m. and 10 p.m. Sheffield, the capital of the steel and fine cutlery manufactory, is finely situated on an eminence at the confluence of the rivers Sheaf and Don, the former enclosing the town on the eastern, and the latter on the north-eastern side. Over the Don there is a bridge of five arches, forming the entrance into the town from the Rotherham and Barnsley roads; in fact, until the formation of the railways, the grand means of access from the other great manufacturing districts of the West Riding. It was built in the year 1485, and widened in 1762, and is called Lady's Bridge, deriving its name, as is supposed, from a conventual institution which stood near it, and which was dedicated to the Virgin Mary. There is also a bridge over the Sheaf, consisting of one arch, which was rebuilt by Edward, Duke of Norfolk, in 1769, and which leads to the park and manor. The whole of the district on which this great and important place is built, appears to have been in the possession of the Lovetots, the Furnivals, and the Talbots of Shrewsbury, from the Conquest till somewhere about the beginning of the seventeenth century, when the manorial property passed by marriage to the Howards, dukes of Norfolk. The place then became of historic interest, for in the noble castle by which the town was defended, the unfortunate—let us hope not the justly unfortunate—Mary, Queen of Scots, was imprisoned for fourteen years. The stronghold was demolished after the civil war between Charles and his parliament, and nothing now remains of it but the recollection preserved in the names of the street and district of Castle Street and Castle Hill.

"Vox et preterea nihil."

A breathing from the past, but yet a breathing that portends of the future,—a word is more durable than stone, for it is eternal. The only other ancient recollections are those preserved by the mouldering remains of a mansion, or rather summer-house, of the Talbots, on the summit of Larkhill, a commanding eminence near the town, which was occasionally the residence of the unfortunate Mary, Queen of Scots. From a very early period Sheffield became celebrated for making articles of cutlery, especially the thwytel, or, as we now call it, whittle, or common pocket-knife, carried by the lower orders for cutting the victuals, or assisting them in any ordinary domestic service, and which was retained also by those who were not entitled to wear a sword as a weapon of defence. In this article the town obtained a national fame; and Chaucer, in describing the accountments and appearance of a miller in the time of Edward III., says of the Sheffield cutlery:

"A Sheffield thwytel bare he in his hose:
Ronde was his face, and camysed was his nose."

Arrow-heads were of course, in the days of archery, a common article of merchandise, and became a staple of Sheffield manufacture; consequently the town seal of Sheffield, or rather the Sheffield trustees of the town trust—for now the place is incorporated—bears upon it a number of arrows crossed, surmounted by a winged head. As civilization grew, and the necessities of a more and more refined state of being were developed, the manufactures of Sheffield were varied and increased. Scythes, sickles, and other agricultural implements were produced. Surgical instruments began to be called for. The manufacture, the manipulation, the preparation of the most delicate steel articles, gradually drew out the abilities, the energy, and the capital of the residents, until genius and power combining together have so grown in their impulse and comprehensiveness, that the most beautiful and delicate articles are formed by the artisans as matters of daily occurrence. This is the principal business of Sheffield; but it has also another—that of silver-plating, or the formation of articles made of copper covered with solid silver. This branch of business arose about a century ago. The original method of silver-plating was discovered by Thomas Bolsover, an ingenious mechanic of the town, but its practice was very much extended in after years by Mr. Joseph Hancock, and Sheffield may now be said to be unrivalled in this branch of manufacture, as it is in that of cutlery, all over the world. The town itself, in its older portions, is unsightly and irregular, but there are many noble edifices, and all the newer parts are built with taste and judgment. The parish church, especially, is a noble ecclesiastical structure in the early English style, but replete with ornaments apparently added at a later date; and St. Paul's, in the Grecian style, St. George's and St. Philip's, in the Gothic style, are all fine edifices. The town-hall, a spacious structure well adapted for its purpose, contains a large room where the sessions are held, and all the other offices, with apartments for the police magistrates and other persons. The Cutlers'-hall in Church Street, built in 1832, at an expense of £7000, is an exceedingly elegant edifice, with a handsome stone front in the Corinthian style. The Music-hall, in Surrey Street, is a handsome edifice in the Grecian style of architecture; it is precisely what its name announces—a place for harmonious reunions, in which concerts are held, and a library and a literary and philosophical society have been established. The Sheffield markets are necessarily supplied from a very extensive circuit. The chief market is on Tuesday, held in the Corn Exchange, a handsome building erected on the site of the Shrewsbury hospital, at the expense of the Duke of Norfolk, to whom most of the town ground belongs; it was opened in 1830, and during the same year a new cattle-market was given for the advantage of the public. There is a commodious butcher-market at the foot of the market-place, in the very centre of the town. The other markets are all adjoining. Sheffield was one of the places included in Lord John Russell's Reform Bill, and has sprung up from its native obscurity to its present position and importance, without the government even of a single magistrate. Now it has a regular corporate jurisdiction. The living of the parish is a vicarage in the archd^y and diocese of York, rated at £12. 15s. 2½d.; gross income, £1,325. Tithes, &c., commuted in 1779. Patrons in 1841, P. Gell, Esq., and A. Lawson, Esq. The church is a very ancient structure, with a tower and spire in the centre, and was originally cruciform. The church service is performed by the vicar and three assistants, besides the vicar's curate. There are ten perpetual curacies in the parish. The following are in the patronage of the vicar:—St. Paul's; gross income, £184; St. James's; gross income, £160; St. George's; gross income, £365; St. Philip's; gross income, £180; St. Mary's; gross income, £190; Attercliffe with curacy of Darnal; gross income, £194; Eccleshall-Bierlow; gross income, £160. Fulwood is in the patronage of Miss Silcock. St. John's is in the patronage of trustees. The last of these is St. Luke's, Crooks, the incumbent of which was inducted in 1840. Some of the chapels, which are all modern, are elegant edifices. Amongst the numerous dissenting churches are those of the Independents, formed in 1720, 1729, 1780, 1783, 1803, and 1834; a Presbyterian, formed in 1681; two Wesleyan Methodist, one formed in 1804; and one of the New Connexion, formed in 1797; and places of worship belonging to Baptists, Quakers, Roman Catholics, and Unitarians. Amongst the daily schools are a grammar-school, endowed with £130 for the education of 25 males; a charity school, in which 90 males are educated and wholly maintained, chiefly from funds collected by subscription; another charity school, in which 70 females are educated and wholly maintained partly from funds yielding £152. 5s. 10d. per annum, and partly by subscriptions, &c.; another, endowed with £30 per annum for the education of 30 children; a national school, containing 125 males and 125 females, and a Lancasterian, containing 600 males and 400 females, both of which have lending libraries attached, and are supported partly by subscription, and partly by small payments from the children. Amongst the infant schools are four, partly supported by voluntary contributions, and partly by small payments from the children, including a Lancasterian belonging to Dissenters, and attended by 150 males and 130 females. One of the two day and Sunday national schools is attended by 356 males and 347 females, and the other by 100 females: both have lending libraries attached, and are supported, as usual, partly by voluntary contributions, and partly by small payments from the children. In the vicinity of the town are the Collegiate school, an elegant Gothic edifice, recently erected by a body of proprietors; and the Wesleyan Proprietary school, a larger edifice, still more recently established on similar principles. Amongst the educational establishments of Sheffield, also, are a medical school, at which lectures are delivered, the certificates of attendance at which are received by the College of Surgeons, London; and a mechanics' institution, forming a member of the union noticed under articles LEEDS and LONDON (which see). There is also a literary and philosophical society. The library of the mechanics' institution contains between 5,000 and 6,000 volumes, and there is a subscription library of even greater value. Amongst the charitable institutions of Sheffield are the infirmary, a valuable institution; the dispensary; and the Shrewsbury hospital. The last of these was founded in 1616, by the Earl of Shrewsbury, and rebuilt in 1824, under the direction of the Duke of Norfolk, at an expense of £11,338. 7s., and is now inhabited by 15 poor men and 21 poor women, besides a governor. The rental of the hospital estates in 1836-7, amounted to £1,800. 10s. 9d. The almsmen receive 10s., and the almswomen 8s. a week each; besides which the almsmen are supplied with a purple coat, and the almswomen with a purple gown each, once in seven years, and other habiliments at shorter intervals; the almshouses are also supplied with coals, and a garden is attached to each house. The governor receives in all about £100 per annum. The town burgesses' trust consists of property yielding £1,346. 4s. 10d. per annum, which sum has ordinarily been applied for purposes similar to those to which corporate revenues are applied. The church burgesses' trust consists of property yielding about £1,360 per annum, applied to parochial purposes. There are numerous minor charities, chiefly under the management of the Cutlers' Company, or belonging to the out-townships of the parish, and yielding in all about £1,400 per annum, inclusive of educational endowments. — Contains 22,830 acres: 18,331 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 111,091: ass^d prop^t £126,542: poor rates in

Money orders issued at Newcastle: London letters deliv^d. 7½ a.m.: post closes 9 p.m. Shelton owes its prosperity, if not its existence, to its pastures, of which there are not less than thirty within its boundaries. The town is neatly built, paved, and well lighted with gas; works for the latter purpose having been established here in 1826, at an expense of £35,000. The church, which was erected in 1834, at an outlay of about £10,000, is a large and elegant building in the early English style of architecture, with a handsome tower 120 feet high. The Independents, Baptists, Wesleyan Methodists, and Unitarians, all have places of worship here, and the educational institutions are very numerous. A Mechanics' Institution was established in 1825, and within these few years a handsome edifice has been erected for the use of the members; there are also a library and reading-room. The North Staffordshire Infirmary, a neat structure, containing accommodation for 100 patients, is pleasantly situated on an eminence within the chapelry, and forms a very pleasing object in the landscape. Races are held annually for two days in August, and are largely attended from all parts of the district. Under an act of parliament obtained in 1825, Shelton is governed by a chief bailiff, with a head constable, three acting constables, and six watchmen. For political purposes, this and the neighbouring township of Hanley are included in the parliamentary boundaries of Stoke-upon-Trent. It consists of several streets, the chief of which contain several well-built houses. The church, a large and handsome edifice, with a tower surmounted by a spire, the base of which was never completed, stands on the east side of the market-place. The market cross, a very curious structure, consisting of five arches, is supported by pentagonal columns. In the centre there is a large hexagonal pillar, which stands on two rows of steps, and supports a flat roof, above which is a lofty pyramidal spire, adorned with Gothic niches, and crowned with an oblong entablature, on which is a figure of our

Saviour, with those of several saints and of the two malefactors. The cross was erected in the year 1500, by Walter and Agnes Buckland, by whom lands were left to keep it in repair. The Unitarians (originally Presbyterians), Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Roman Catholics, all have chapels here; and belonging to the last-named body, there formerly was a convent of visitation nuns. The silk, crape, and velvet manufactures constitute the principal trade of the place. The grammar-school, founded in 1639, by George Strode and other benefactors of the town, is endowed with about £80 a year; out of which fund four poor widows have an allowance of 5s. 6d. a week each; the remainder is paid to the master of the school, who is bound to give free education to as many boys of the town as he receives pounds for that purpose. Four poor boys are educated, and a fee of £7 given with each of them as an apprentice-fee. Almshouses for four poor men were founded in 1699 by Edward Strode, Esq., and endowed with property which now yields upwards of £360 per annum, out of which the four almsmen receive 5s. a week each, and clothing; the remainder is given away in bread to the second poor after church on Sunday — 190 5-lb. loaves are now distributed every Sunday. The other charities yield about £82 per annum. The town is governed by a high constable and subordinate officers. The county Bridewell, a large and imposing building, is situated here. Shepton-Mallet is one of the polling-places for the eastern division of the county. In 1840, several sepulchral urns, containing bones and ashes, were discovered in the parish, while digging over a tumulus on a farm called the Beacon, which is situated on a hill near to some very extensive Roman intrenchments, called Masbury Camp. Besides this, however, there are several other tumuli of equally ancient date. The Shepton-Mallet poor-law union comprises 25 parishes, with a population of about 18,000 persons, spread over an area of 81 square miles. — The living (St. Peter and St. Paul), a rectory in the archd^y. of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, is valued at £33. 12s. 1d.: pres. net income, £533: patrons, Prince of Wales and Rev. SHERBORNE, DORSET, a parish and market town in the hund^d. and union of Sherborne: 140 miles from London (coach road 117), 6 from Yeovil, 18 from Dorchester.—Gt. West. Rail. through Chippenham to Frome, thence 25 miles: from Derby, through Birmingham and Chippenham to Frome, &c., 199 miles.—Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 9 a.m.: post closes 4½ p.m.—This is a place of very remote antiquity, having been of considerable importance even in the time of the Saxons, who called it Scireburn, from scir, clear, and burn, a brook or small rivulet. A monastery for secular canons was established here soon after the conversion of the West Saxons to Christianity. In 988 the rule of St. Benedict was introduced, and it became an abbey, which continued until the dissolution, when its revenues were valued at £682. 14s. 7d. In 705, King Ina erected Sherborne into an episcopal see, and constituted Aldhelm its first bishop, the diocese originally comprehending the counties of Dorset, Wilts, Berks, Somerset, Devon, and Cornwall; but the seat of it was, in 1075, removed to the then more important city of Sarum. (See SALISBURY.) The ancient castle, built by Roger, bishop of Salisbury, in the time of Henry I., stood upon a rocky eminence at the east end of the town. During the civil war it was garrisoned for Charles I., but in 1645 it was stormed by the forces under Lord Fairfax and Cromwell, and ultimately dismantled. The ruins are still considerable, the gateways, and some other portions of the building, still remaining. The town, which is very pleasantly situated, partly on the side of a hill, and partly in the fertile vale of Blackmore, is irregularly built, but contains several respectable streets, is well paved and lighted, and the inhabitants are abundantly supplied with water. The church is a large and handsome edifice, exhibiting many various styles of architecture, and is said to have been erected out of the ruins of the palace which existed here in the time of King Athelstane. The free grammar-school, erected in 1550 by Edward V., may be called a fully collegiate school, for it has an income of upwards of £1,100 per annum, and a complete course of classical instruction is carried on in it. Attached to it are four exhibitions, of £60 a year each, to the universities. A new schoolhouse was erected in 1836, at an outlay of about £1,000, and there are now generally about forty boys upon the foundation. The Blue-coat school has about thirty pupils, and is also chiefly supported by endowment. The churchwardens of Sherborne have the right of sending three boys to Christ's Hospital, in London, for whose support Mr. Giles Russell gave lands in 1669. The almshouse of St. John the Baptist and St. John the Evangelist, seems to have originated in the time of Henry IV., but was refounded by Henry VI., who granted a charter of incorporation and a common seal. The number of inmates is twenty-four, viz., sixteen men and eight women, one of whom is selected to fill the office of prior or principal; the income is about £800 a year. The other public charities produce about £250 a year. The Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Society of Friends, all have chapels here. The town is under the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, and is one of the polling-places for the county members. The Sherborne poor-law union comprises thirty parishes, with a population of about 11,500 persons, spread over an area of 61 square miles.—The living (Virgin Mary), a vicarage in the diocese of Sarum, is valued at £20. 4s. 7d.: pres. net income, £258: patron, the Crown: pres. incumbent, John Parsons, 1830: contains 4,900 acres: 762 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 4,758: probable popⁿ in 1849, 5,471: ass^d. prop^r. £13,501: poor rates in 1848, £816. 18s.—Market day, Thursday. Fairs: July 18 and 26, and first Monday after October 10.—Bankers: Branch of Wilts and Dorset Banking Co.—draw on London and Westminster Bank; National Provincial Bank of England—draw on London and Westminster Bank.—Angel, King's Arms, and Antelope Inns.—Sherborne Lodge, or Castle, as it is more properly called, is situated in the pleasure-grounds which surrounded the old fortress. It was erected by different proprietors, but chiefly by Sir Walter Raleigh, whose name is still remembered in the appellation of a part of the domain, and whose arms appear upon the centre, which is the most ancient part of the building. It is built in the form of the letter H, and the apartments, which are sumptuously furnished in the most correct taste, contain several admirable pictures. The park, which contains 340 acres, and nearly surrounds the mansion, is justly admired for its picturesque beauty, its water, the variety of its grounds, and its massive woods. The noble owner of this splendid property, Earl Digby, D.C.L., Viscount Coleshill, and Baron Digby in the peerage of England, Lord Digby, baron of Geasehill, in the peerage of Ireland, derives his descent from an ancient family of the name of Tilton, who were early seated at a place so called in the county of Leicester, but who removed about the year 1256 to Digby, in Lincolnshire. About two centuries afterwards, that is, about 1434, we find Everard Digby, Esq., filling the office of high sheriff of Rutland, and representing that county in parliament. He fell at the battle of Towton, fighting under the banner of the unfortunate Henry VI. His eldest son, Sir Everard, was the ancestor of Sir Kehelm Digby, called "the ornament of England," who wrote several learned books, became a great benefactor to the Bodleian library at Oxford in 1633, by presenting it with a large mass of very valuable MSS., and rendered his family famous throughout the Christian world. He suffered severely in the cause of Charles I., but ultimately returned to England, was appointed one of the council on the first settlement of the Royal Society, and died in 1665. The second son of Everard Digby, Sir Simon Digby, Knt., of Coleshill, in the county of Derby, having mainly contributed, with his six valiant brothers, to the success of Henry, Earl of Richmond, at the battle of Bosworth, was rewarded by that monarch with large grants of land, and lucrative public employments. From him was descended Sir George Digby, whose second son, George, was, in 1618, created Baron Digby of Sherborne, and was, in 1622, elevated to the earldom of Bristol. His lordship was an eminent statesman, and a zealous adherent to Charles I., whom he attended to the battle of Edgehill. On the termination of the contest, his estates were confiscated, and he retired to France, where he died in 1652. His lordship's honours expired with the third earl, who died in 1698. The elder son of Sir George, Robert, married Lettice, daughter of Lord Oasley, who was created Baroness of Oasley, and brought into the Digby family the barony of Geasehill, in Ireland. Their son, Robert, was accordingly elevated, in 1620, to the peerage of Ireland as Lord Geasehill. The descendant of that nobleman, Henry, the seventh baron, was, in 1765, created a peer of Great Britain, by the title of Baron Digby of Sherborne, and was further advanced to the dignities of Viscount Coleshill, in the county of Warwick, and Earl Digby of Digby, in the county of Lincoln. His lordship died in 1793, when he was succeeded by the present noble earl, who is, in addition to his other titles, lord-lieutenant and custos rotulorum of the county of Dorset.

SHERBORNE, GLOUCESTER, a parish in the hund^d of Slaughter, union of Northleach: 96 miles from London (coach road 80), 5 from Northleach, 8 from Stow-on-the-Wold. — Gt. West. Rail. through Oxford to Stow-on-the-Wold, thence 8 miles: from Derby, through Birmingham and Worcester to Stow, &c., 109 miles. — Money orders issued at Northleach: London letters deliv^d. 10 a.m.: post closes 5 p.m. — Sherborne is a small village, situated, as its name imports, in a little valley, through which a bourne or rivulet runs, which rises at Farmington, and falls into the Windrush near Great Barrington. The manor belonged to the abbey of Winchcombe from before the Conquest, with the exception of a small interval, during which it was assigned to St. Ebrulph's abbey in Normandy; but on the alienation of the foreign priories it reverted to its former possessors, and ultimately became the property of the Dutton family, from whom it descended through the female line to its owner, Lord Sherborne, their present representative. In the church, a small edifice which was rebuilt by Lennox Dutton, Esq., there are several marble monuments of the family. Dr. James Bradley, Regius Professor of Astronomy, was born here in 1692. Having received the rudiments of his education at Northleach, he was sent to Baliol College, Oxford, where he took his degree, and entered into holy orders, intending to minister in the church; but the extensive knowledge of mathematics which he derived from intercourse with his uncle, Dr. James Pound, gave his studies another direction, and at the age of 29, in 1721, he was appointed Savilian Professor of Astronomy, his university sending him a diploma, creating him a Doctor of Divinity. He then devoted himself entirely to his favourite science of astronomy, and, by his various important discoveries, obtained the friendship of the most eminent literati of the day, which occasioned his elevation to the post of Astronomer-

Royal. During his residence at the Observatory, he was offered the living of Greenwich, which, from conscientious motives, he declined, when George II., hearing of the circumstance, made an addition of £250 a year to his salary, and that sum has been regularly continued to his successors. He died in 1762, and was buried at Minchinhampton, in his native county. — The living, a disch^d. vicarage, with that of Windrush, in the diocese of Gloucester and Bristol, is valued at £15. 6s. 8d.: pres. net inc^{om}, £194: patron, Lord Sherborne: pres. incumbent, E. J. Todd, 1843: contains 4,560 acres: 116 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 637: ass^d. prop^y. £4,224: poor rates in 1848, £172. 7s. Tithes commuted in 1777. — Sherborne House, the seat of Lord Sherborne, is an extensive mansion, consisting of two quadrangles, the eastern and most ancient parts of which are supposed to have been a seat of the abbots of Winchcombe. Two pleasing parks are attached to the house, each of which is between three or four miles in circumference. His lordship derives his lineage from Odard, one of the companions in arms of William the Conqueror, who acquired large possessions, and seated himself at Dutton, in Cheshire. From that chief was descended Sir Thomas Dutton, who was high sheriff of Cheshire in 1226. From him, through a long line of distinguished ancestry, was descended James Dutton, Esq., M.P. for Gloucestershire, who was raised to the peerage in 1784, by the title of Baron Sherborne. His lordship died in 1820, when he was succeeded by the present peer.

SHERBORNE, WARWICK, a parish in the Snitfield division of the hund^d of Barlichway, union of Warwick, on the river Avon: 101 miles from London (coach road 92), 3 from Warwick, 6 from Stratford-on-Avon. — Nor. West. Rail. through Rugby to Leamington, thence 5 miles: from Derby, through Rugby, &c., 68 miles. — Money orders issued at Warwick: London letters deliv^d. 8½ a.m.: post closes 7 p.m. — The living (All Saints) is a perpetual curacy in the diocese of Worcester: pres. net inc^{om}, £110: patron, S. Ryland, Esq.: pres. incumbent, William Grice, 1848: contains 1,110 acres: 48 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 209: ass^d. prop^y. £1,817: poor rates in 1848, £135. 5s. Tithes commuted in 1799.

SHERBORNE-ST. JOHN, HANTS, a parish in the hund^d and union of Basingstoke, Basingstoke division of the county: 50 miles from London (coach road 48), 4 from Basingstoke, 8 from Kingsclere. — Sou. West. Rail. to Basingstoke, thence 4 miles: from Derby, through Rugby, Oxford, and Reading, to Basingstoke, &c., 138 miles. — Money orders issued at Basingstoke: London letters deliv^d. 7½ a.m.: post closes 9 p.m. — The charities produce about £20 a year. — The living (St. John), a rectory in the diocese of Winchester, is valued at £9. 8s. 1½d.: pres. net inc^{om}, £491: patron, Wm. L. Wiggett Chute: pres. incumbent, C. P. Buckworth, 1849: contains 3,700 acres: 80 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 718: ass^d. prop^y. £3,460: poor rates in 1848, £416. 13s. — The noble mansion, known by the name of the "Vine," said to have derived its name from the number of vines planted here soon after their introduction into the island by the Romans, is the seat of William Lyde Wiggett Chute, Esq. It was for many years the principal seat of the family of Sandys, both before and after their elevation to the peerage. During the Commonwealth, the manor and mansion passed by purchase to Chaloner Chute, Esq., who died Speaker of the House of Commons, an ancestor of the present proprietor. The building stands low, but is of considerable dimensions; and attached to it there is an ancient domestic chapel. The windows contain stained glass, brought by the first Lord Sandys from Boulogne, after the surrender of that town to the English in the reign of Henry VIII. Each of the tiles on the floor, which were also brought from Boulogne, is marked with a device. Adjoining the chapel there is a tomb erected to the memory of Mr. Chaloner Chute, whose recumbent effigy in his robes of Speaker in the House of Commons, beautifully wrought by Carter in marble, has been placed upon it. The park, though not extensive, is beautifully diversified with hill, dale, wood, and water, and some fine old forest trees. Mr. Chute, whose original name was Wiggett, is the descendant of an old Norfolk family, and assumed his present appellation on succeeding to the estates of the Rev. Thomas Vere Chute in 1827. The Chutes were a family of long standing in the counties of Kent and Somerset. They were lords of the manor of Taunton till about the year 1500, when Edmund Chute sold it to Lord Denham. The Kentish branch of the family became extinct in 1700, on the death of Sir George Chute, Bart. The other branch was continued through the Chaloner Chute above spoken of, to the present proprietor, who is a magistrate of the counties of Hants and Norfolk, and a deputy-lieutenant of the latter; for which, in 1832, he served the office of high sheriff, and represented in parliament from 1837 to 1847.

SHERBORNE-MONKS, HANTS, a parish, partly in the hun^d and union of Basingstoke, Basingstoke division, but chiefly in the hun^d of Chuteley, Kingsclere division of the county: 49 miles from London, 3 from Basingstoke, 16 from Reading. (For access and postal arrangements, see above.) The church is an ancient fabric of Norman architecture, with a nave, chancel, square tower, and curious Gothic porch. There is a chapel at Pamber, formed out of the chancel of the chapel of the old Benedictine priory at Monks-Sherborne. This relic of antiquity, dedicated to St. Mary and St. John, was a cell to the Abbey of Creasy in Normandy. At its suppression, it was given by Henry VI. to Eton College, afterwards by Edward IV. to the hospital of St. Julian, and finally, with that hospital, to Queen's College, Oxford, in the possession of whose principal and fellows it continues. The old tower still remains, and the walls are now beautifully mantled with ivy. In the interior there is a fine figure of a knight-templar, beautifully carved in oak, which is supposed to represent Sir John de Port, who is believed to have been the founder of the priory. The living, a disch^d vicarage in the archd^y and diocese of Winchester, is valued at £8. 8s. 7³/₄d.: pres. net income, £50: patron, Queen's College, Oxford: pres. incumbent, Sept. Bellas, 1848: contains 2,430 acres: 98 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 540: ass^d. prop^r £2,222: poor rates in 1848, £328. 2s.

Shenstone Park, a fine domain, is the seat of Edward Grove, Esq., D.C.L., who derives his immediate descent from William Grove, Esq., D.C.L., and who was M.P. for Coventry from 1741 to 1761. Mr. Grove is a magistrate for the counties of Stafford and Warwick, and a deputy-lieutenant for the former.

SHERBURN, DURHAM, a township in the parish of Pitlington—(which see for access, &c.): 258 miles from London, 3 from Durham, 12 from Sunderland. Rail. through Rugby, Derby, and York, to Sherburn station: from Derby, through York, &c., 121 miles. Money orders issued at Malton: London letters deliv^d. at noon: post closes 1¹/₂ p.m. There is a Wesleyan chapel in the village. The living (St. Hilda), a disch^d vicarage in the archd^y of the east riding and diocese of York, is valued at £6. 0s. 2¹/₂d.: pres. net income, £120: patron, Sir W. Strickland: pres. incumbent, John Mason, 1842: contains 4,630 acres: 90 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 623: ass^d. prop^r £3,461: poor rates in 1848, £108. 2s. Fairs: March 25 and September 29, for horses and flax.

SHERBURN-HOUSE, DURHAM, an extra-parochial liberty in the south division of Easington ward, union of Durham: 257 miles from London, 2 from Durham, 8 from Castle-Eden. Money orders issued at Durham: London letters deliv^d. 10 a.m.: post closes 3¹/₂ p.m. An hospital for lepers was founded here in 1184 by Hugh Pudsey, Bishop of Durham, the revenues of which, at the dissolution of monasteries, was £140. 0s. 4d. per annum. The society then consisted of a master, several priests, and sixty-five lepers. It was afterwards incorporated by Queen Elizabeth for a master and thirty brethren. The master, who must be in holy orders, and an M.A. at least, is appointed by the Bishop of Durham. He nominates the brethren, who, in addition to comfortable lodgings, board, and clothing, severally receive a handsome yearly stipend. The edifice is of a quadrangular form; one side comprising the mansion-house, where the master and chaplain reside, the others the chapel and lodgings for the brethren. The income is about £3,000 per annum. Contains 660 acres: 10 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 86: ass^d. prop^r £1,909.

SHERBURN, WEST RIDING, YORK, a parish, partly in the liberty of St. Peter of York, East Riding, and partly in the upper division of the wapentake of Barkstone-Ash: the parish includes the townships of Barkstone, Huddleston and Lumby, Lotherton, and part of Aberford, Micklefield, South Milford, Newthorpe, and Sherburn: 207 miles from London (coach road 186), 7 from Tadcaster, 9 from Pontefract. Nor. West. Rail. through Rugby and Derby to Sherburn station: from Derby, through Chesterfield to Sherburn, 75 miles. Money orders issued at Ferrybridge: London letters deliv^d. 10.10 a.m.: post closes 3 p.m. Sherburn was anciently a place of considerable importance, and at one time King Athelstane had a palace here. During the great civil war, it was the scene of a severe action, in which Lord Digby, who commanded the royalists, was defeated, and lost his baggage and private papers, which being published, had a most disastrous influence on the king's fortunes. The town, which is large and well built, is celebrated for its orchards, and particularly for a peculiar species of plum called the "wine sour," which is much used for preserves, having a peculiarly piquant flavour. An hospital and school were erected here in 1619 by Robert Hungate, Esq., who endowed them with a rent-charge of £195. 6s. 8d. Attached to the foundation are four scholarships in St. John's College, Cambridge; and the school has a right of competition for Lady Hastings' exhibition at Queen's College, Oxford. Another school has an endowment for the education of six female orphans. The other charities produce about £5. 16s. a year. Flax and teasel are extensively cultivated in the neighbourhood, and at a short distance from the town there is a valuable stone quarry. — The living (All Saints), a disch^d. vicarage in the diocese of York, is valued at £10. 17s. 1d.: pres. net income, £135: patron, Prebendary of Fenton: pres. incumbent, J. Matthews, 1830: contains 11,650 acres: 648 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 3,757: probable popⁿ in 1849, 4,320: ass^d. prop^r. £12,618: poor rates in 1848, £454. 10s. — Market day, Friday. Fairs: March 25, September 29.

SHERE, SURREY, a parish in the second division of the hun^d. of Blackheath, union of Guildford: 34 miles from London (coach road 28), 5 from Guildford. — Sou. West. Rail. to Guildford, thence 5 miles: from Derby, through London, &c., 169 miles. — Money orders issued at Guildford: London letters deliv^d. 9½ a.m.: post closes 3½ p.m. — The village is agreeably situated at the southern foot of a range of chalk hills, on the little river Tillingbourn, a branch of the Wey. The church, which is a small but handsome edifice, contains several ancient tombs, some interesting stained glass windows, and memorials of the families of those who have been the chief proprietors and residents. Some charities have been left for parochial purposes. — The living (St. James), a rectory in the archd^y. of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester, is valued at £26. 1s. 5d.: pres. net income, £700: patron, Rev. R. L. Adams: pres. incumbent, D. C. Delafosse, 1844: contains 5,900 acres: 213 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 1,347: probable popⁿ in 1849, 1,549: ass^d. prop^r. £4,157: poor rates in 1848, £868. 16s. — The Manor is the seat of Edward Bray, Esq., who derives his descent from the Sieur de Bray, one of the knights on the roll of Battle Abbey, and who was one of the subscribing witnesses to the charter conferred by William upon the abbey in the year 1080. Several members of the family filled the office of high sheriff for the counties of Bedfordshire, Buckinghamshire, and Northamptonshire, between the years 1202 and 1273. Sir Richard Bray, one of the descendants of the Norman knight, was a member of the privy council of Henry VI.; and one of his sons, Sir Reginald, was a very distinguished personage in the reign of Henry VII., having been largely instrumental in assisting that monarch in attaining his throne. He was created a knight-banneret, K.G., and Lord High Treasurer. From his (Sir Reginald's) brother, and heir male, Sir Edward Bray was descended, and from him William Bray, Esq., the learned historian of Surrey, and treasurer to the Society of Antiquaries. Mr. Bray died in 1832, when he was succeeded in the estates by their present proprietor. — Netley House is the seat of Mrs. Fraser: its extensive plantations crown the brow of the hill which overlooks the village.

SHEREFORD, NORFOLK, a parish in the hun^d. of Gallow, union of Walsingham, watered by the Wensum: 142 miles from London (coach road 111), 3 from Fakenham, 7 from New Walsingham. — Nor. and East. The family of Cresswell, which has been in the possession of considerable estates in the county of Salop for upwards of two centuries, was originally seated at Barnehurst, in Staffordshire, where they had a fine old manor-house, and had, for a long period, enjoyed a very large property. The only remains of that antique mansion is an ivy-clad tower, which forms a beautiful object in the landscape. The earliest historic record that we have of the several members of this family, is of Sir Thomas Cresswell de Barnehurst, Knt., who was living in 1465. One of his descendants, anciently a place of considerable importance, and at one time King Athelstane had a palace here. During the great civil war, it was the scene of a severe action, in which Lord Digby, who commanded the royalists, was defeated, and lost his baggage and private papers, which being published, had a most disastrous influence on the king's fortunes. The town, which is large and well built, is celebrated for its orchards, and particularly for a peculiar species of plum called the "wine sour," which is much used for preserves, having a peculiarly piquant flavour. An hospital and school were erected here in 1619 by Robert Hungate, Esq., who endowed them with a rent-charge of £195. 6s. 8d. Attached to the foundation are four scholarships in St. John's College, Cambridge; and the school has a right of competition for Lady Hastings' exhibition at Queen's College, Oxford. Another school has an endowment for the education of six female orphans. The other charities produce about £5. 16s. a year. Fairs: May 12, and October 2, for oxen and fat cattle. Pinkney Park is the seat of W. H. Cresswell, Esq. The family of Cresswell, which has been in the possession of considerable estates in the county of Salop for upwards of two centuries, was originally seated at Barnehurst, in Staffordshire, where they had a fine old manor-house, and had, for a long period, enjoyed a very large property. The only remains of that antique mansion is an ivy-clad tower, which forms a beautiful object in the landscape. The earliest historic record that we have of the several members of this family, is of Sir Thomas Cresswell de Barnehurst, Knt., who was living in 1465. One of his descendants, Richard Cresswell, Esq., distinguished himself greatly as a zealous adherent of Charles I. during the civil war, and filled the office of high sheriff of Shropshire in 1670. The grandson of that gentleman married Elizabeth, daughter, and eventually heiress, of Sir Thomas Estcourt, Knt., of Pinkney, and by her acquired the manors of Sherston, Pinkney, and Norton, along with other considerable estates in Wiltshire, all of which have descended to the present representative of the family, William Henry Cresswell, Esq., who inherited, in 1841, on the decease of his father.—Weston Birt House is the seat of Robert Stayler Holford, Esq., the representative of a branch of the ancient family of Holford, in Cheshire, and who traces his descent immediately from Sir Robert Holford, Knt., an eminent barrister and master in Chancery. Mr. Holford was high sheriff of the county of Gloucester in 1843, and is a magistrate for that county and Wiltshire.

SHERSTON-PARVA, WILTS. a parish in the hund^d of Chippenham, union of Malmesbury, watered by a branch of the Avon: 99 miles from London, 5 from Malmesbury, 10 from Sodbury. —(For access and postal arrangements, see above.)—The living, a disch^d rectory, united to the vicarage of Sherston-Magna, is valued at £3. 14s. 4d.: contains 1,340 acres: 17 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 155: ass^d. prop^r. £1,060: poor rates in 1848, £90. 5s.

SHIDLAW. See CARHAM.

SHIELDS (NORTH). See TYNEMOUTH.

SHIELDS (SOUTH), DURHAM. a township, seaport, market town, borough, and chapelry, in the parish of Jarrow, on the south side of the river Tyne: 300 miles from London (coach road 276), 9 from Newcastle-upon-Tyne, 8 from Sunderland. —Nor. West. Rail. through Rugby, Derby, and York, to Shields station: from Derby through York, &c., 168 miles.—Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 8 a.m. and 10.10 a.m.: post closes 3½ p.m. and 8½ p.m.—The town consists principally of one long and narrow street, very devious in its course, which extends for nearly two miles along the bank of the river; but the higher and more spacious parts, which comprise the dwellings of the more affluent residents of the place, presents several spacious streets and elegant squares, the houses being well built, and the thoroughfares lighted with gas. In a large square in the centre of the town stands the town-hall, in which the petty sessions for the district are held every second and fourth Wednesday in each month; but it also serves as an exchange, and contains a public newsroom, the under part, which forms a colonnade, being used as a market-place for butter, eggs, and poultry. There is a small but neat theatre in the town, and a literary and scientific institution has been established, as well as an excellent subscription library. Shipbuilding is the principal business of the place, and the dry docks for the construction and repairing of vessels are accordingly numerous. The original life-boat was built at this port. The commercial business of the port is principally in coals, which are brought chiefly from Newcastle in kials, but also from pits in the vicinity, and frequently from a distance by railway, the Stanhope and Tyne Railway Company having expended upwards of £200,000 in the construction of their line for shipping coals at Shields. Some vessels are engaged in the Baltic trade, and a company with a large capital has been formed for commercial intercourse with the East Indies. In fiscal arrangements, South Shields is subject to Newcastle. Besides shipbuilding, however, there are manufactories of glass, several soap-works, breweries, and other industrial establishments. Some of these must have been in extensive operation, for a number of artificial hills have been formed by cinders from the glass and salt works, which have become so solid that buildings have been erected upon them. The chapel is of very ancient origin, but from continual repairs it has been almost entirely rebuilt, and the only part that can be said to be strictly ancient is the tower. There is also a chapel of ease, which has been erected within these few years; and the Independents, Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists, the United Receders, Particular Baptists, and Presbyterians, all have places of worship here. The educational and social charities are numerous. The borough of South Shields, with the township of Westoe, was enfranchised by the Reform Act, and now returns one member to parliament, the returning officer being appointed by the sheriff of the county. Besides the petty sessions, the courts-leet and the courts-baron of the Dean and Chapter of Durham are also held here, as lords of the manor of Westoe; the officers of both courts are the bailiff and steward. This is one of the places which, though of ancient date, have recently, through the development of the commercial power of Britain, sprung into their present importance, with an ample prospect of still greater prosperity and advancement. —The living, a perpetual curacy in the archd^y and diocese of Durham, is valued at £66. 8s. 4d.: pres. net income, £335: patron, Dean and Chapter of Durham: pres. incumbent, J. Carr, 1831: contains 4,928 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 9,082: probable popⁿ in 1849, 10,444: poor rates in 1848, £3,205. 12s. —Market day, Wednesday. SHIFFNAL, SALOP, a parish and market town in the Shiffnal division of the hund^d of Brimstree, union of Shiffnal: the parish includes the chapelry of Priors-Lee with Oakengale, and the townships of Hatton and Woodside: 139 miles from London (coach road 135), 8 from Newport, 20 from Shrewsbury. —Nor. West. Rail. through Wolverhampton to Shiffnal station: from Derby, through Birmingham, Wolverhampton, &c., 68 miles. —Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7 a.m.: post closes 7.10 p.m. —The town, which is situated on the old high coach road from London to Holyhead, consists principally of one long street. It has little that is remarkable beside its parish church, which is a large and handsome cruciform edifice, and contains a fine altar, and several tombs of the Briggs family. In one part there is a remarkable inscription to the memory of William Wakley, who was baptised in 1591, and was buried at Adbaston in 1714, at the age of 124 years, having lived during the reigns of eight kings and queens, viz., from the time of Elizabeth to George I. The trade of Shiffnal principally consists in the manufacture of paper, but there are some considerable mines and coal-pits in the neighbourhood. This was the birth-place of Dr. Beddoes, the celebrated reader on chemistry at the University of Oxford, where he finished his education. He was born in 1754. After passing through his academic course, and filling the office of chemical professor, he practised as a physician at Bristol, was the author of several valuable publications, and the correspondent of most of the eminent scientific men of his day. He died in 1808. The Baptists, Methodists, and Roman Catholics, have chapels here. The Charities produce about £68 a year. The Shiffnal poor-law union comprises 15 parishes, with a population of about 11,000 persons, spread over an area of 67 square miles. —The living (St. Andrew), a vicarage in the archd^y of Salop, and diocese of Lichfield, is valued at £15. 6s. 8d.: pres. net income, £450: patron, Rev. John Brooke: pres. incumbent, T. Brooke, 1847: contains 1,080 acres: 968 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 5,244: probable popⁿ in 1849, 6,030: ass^d prop^r £20,662: poor rates in 1848, £1,460. SHOOTER'S HILL, KENT, an eminence in the parish of Eltham, upon and near which are several pleasing residences. The eminence affords a delightful view of the surrounding country, including the metropolis, the river Thames and its shipping, and the long range of the Surrey hills.

SHOPLAND, ESSEX, a parish in the hun^d and union of Rochford: 38 miles from London (coach road 41), 1 from Rochford, 3 from Southend. East. Co. Rail. to Brentwood, thence 20 miles: from Derby, through London, &c., 170 miles. Money orders issued at Rochford: London letters deliv^d 8½ a.m.: post closes 4 p.m. The church is small, but contains an interesting tomb and brass, and a magnificent font, supposed to be the finest in Essex, obit 900. The living (St. Mary Magdalene), a disch^d vicarage in the diocese of Rochester, is valued at £9: pres. net income, £80: patron, Harriet Aitken: pres. incumbent, F. Thackeray: contains 1,430 acres: 8 houses: popⁿ in 1851, 56: ass^d prop^r £1,267.

SHOREDITCH (St. LEONARD), MIDDLESEX, a parish in the Tower division of the hun^d of Ossulstone: it includes the districts of Hoxton, Church-end, Moorfields, and Holywell-Street. The parish forms part of the metropolis, and is chiefly peopled by the working classes. The church is a fine edifice, built from the design of the elder Mr. Dance, having a columned portico in the Roman Doric style of architecture. There is hardly a section of the Dissenters which has not a chapel here. One of the parochial schools for boys is endowed with £66. 10s. per annum, and another for girls with £169 per annum. The almshouses of the Haberdashers' Company, a very excellent and extensive institution, are situated at Hoxton. The whole of the streets of this extensive parish are well paved, and, like the rest of London, lighted with gas. The living (St. Leonard), a vicarage in the arch^d and diocese of London, is valued at £17: pres. net income, £656: patron, Archdeacon of London: pres. incumbent, T. S. Evans, 1841: contains 620 acres: 10,698 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 83,432: ass^d prop^r £294,213: poor rates in 1848, £22,598. 18s.

SHOREHAM, KENT, a parish in the hun^d of Codsheath, lath of Sutton-at-Hone, union of Seven-Oaks, on the river Darent: 25 miles from London (coach road 18), 5 from Seven-Oaks, 8 from Dartford. Nor. Kent Rail. to Dartford, thence 8 miles: from Derby, through London, &c., 157 miles. Money orders issued at Seven-Oaks: London letters deliv^d 8½ a.m.: post closes 6 p.m. The village stands on both sides of the river, over which there is a bridge. Leland says there was a castle here, which was in ruins as early as the time of Henry VIII. The church is an ancient building, and contains several fine monuments. There are three almshouses for aged widows, and a commodious and well-built free school. The living (St. Peter and St. Paul), a disch^d vicarage in the diocese of Canterbury, is valued at £14. 6s. 8d.: pres. net income, £370: patron, Dean and Chapter of Westminster: pres. incum-

A fine mansion, in the Elizabethan style, has been erected here by Mr. Mildman, of Berkeley Square, on the estate then belonging to the late Lord Ashburton, now left to Mr. Mildman. Lord Ashburton, who made this his principal residence, was the second son of the late Sir Francis Baring, Bart., and his successor as head of the great commercial house in the city of London which bears their name. His lordship was raised to the peerage in 1835, in consequence of his eminent position in society, and the mental, social, and moral qualities by which he was so much distinguished. His lordship was a privy councillor, a trustee of the British Museum, and a D.C.L. of Oxford; but was succeeded in the title and extensive estates in 1848, by the present peer, William Bingham Baring, the second baron, who is also a privy councillor, and who has been paymaster-general to the forces, and secretary to the Board of Control. The title was originally conferred on the celebrated barrister, Mr. John Dunning, who was a native of Ashburton, and who married Elizabeth, sister of Sir Francis Baring; but his son dying issueless, the title became extinct in 1823, until it was revived in the person of the late peer, who, it will be perceived, was a cousin of the first lord.

SHOREHAM (NEW), SUSSEX, a parish, borough, seaport, and market town, in the hun^d of Fishergate, rape of Bramber, union of Steyning: 56 miles from London, 6 from Brighton, 5 from Worthing. Brighton and Sou. Coast Rail. through Brighton to Shoreham station: from Derby, through London, &c., 188 miles. Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7 a.m. and 12½ p.m.: post closes 10 a.m. and 9 p.m. This town is situated about a mile from the English Channel, on the river Adur, which is crossed by a long wooden bridge, and also by an elegant suspension bridge, erected by his Grace the Duke of Norfolk to facilitate the access to Worthing. It rose originally from the decay of Old Shoreham, now an insignificant village about half a mile distant, but anciently a place of some importance. The only remarkable historical fact connected with it is, that it occupies the spot where Alla the Saxon landed with supplies for Hengist and Hova. The church is a handsome Norman structure. Shipbuilding is carried on here to some considerable extent. The trade and importance of the port has greatly increased; its revenues, which, in 1810, amounted to about £7000, being now upwards of £35,000. The harbour is tidal, and very commodious. The chief imports consist of timber, deals, French merchandise, coal, &c., and the principal export is that of oak timber. The custom-house is a handsome Grecian edifice. The river, which runs parallel with the town, and joins the sea at about half a mile to the east, is navigable for ships of large burthen. Shoreham is a borough by prescription, the government being vested in a high constable appointed by the lord of the manor. It has sent two members to parliament since the reign of Edward I. New Shoreham and Cowfold are the polling-places, the franchise having been extended to the whole rape of Bramber. There are places of worship for the Independents and Wesleyan Methodists. A Carmelite priory, founded by Sir John Mowbray, Knt., and also an hospital dedicated to St. James, formerly stood here, but there are now no trace of either. — The living (Virgin Mary), a disch^d. vicarage in the archd^y. of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, is valued at £6. 1s. 8d.: pres. net income, £127: patron, Magdalene College, Oxford: pres. incumbent, W. Wheeler, 1843: contains 170 acres: 285 houses: popⁿ. in 1841, 1,998: probable popⁿ. in 1849, 2,298: ass^d. prop^y. £1,046: poor rates in 1848, £343. 7s — Star, Dolphin, and Bridge Hotels.

SHOREHAM (Old), SUSSEX, a parish in the hund^d. of Fishergate, rape of Bramber, union of Steyning: 55 miles from London, 1 from New Shoreham, 17 from Horsham. — (For access and postal arrangements, see above.) — The church, which consists of a nave, chancel, and transept, with a tower, is the most interesting ecclesiastical edifice in the county, being evidently of Saxon origin. Old Shoreham was once a place of considerable importance, but appears to have decayed in consequence of the advance and prosperity of New Shoreham. — The living (St. Nicholas), a disch^d. vicarage in the archd^y. of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, is valued at £7. 18s. 6d.: pres. net income, £458: patron, Magdalene College, Oxford: pres. incumbent, W. Wheeler, 1843: contains 1,870 acres: 42 houses: popⁿ. in 1841, 224: ass^d. prop^y. £1,908: poor rates in 1848, £114. 6s.

SHORESWOOD, DURHAM, a township in the parish of Norham or Northumberland — (which see for access, &c.): 333 miles from London, 6 from Berwick-on-Tweed, 8 from Coldstream. — Money orders issued at Berwick: London letters deliv^d. 3½ p.m.: post closes 10½ a.m. — Contains 1,100 acres: 50 houses: popⁿ. in 1841, 315: ass^d. prop^y. £1,325: poor rates in 1848, £87. 4s.

SHORNE AND MERSTON, KENT, a parish in the hund^d. of Sharnwell, lathe of Aylesford, union of North Aylesford: 28 miles from London (coach road 26), 4 from Gravesend, 4 from Strood. — Nor. Kent Rail. to Gravesend, thence 4 miles: from Derby, through London, &c., 160 miles. — Money orders issued at Gravesend: London letters deliv^d. 8 a.m.: post closes 8 p.m. — The church, which is a pleasing edifice, contains a fine monument to the memory of Henry de Cobham, who lived in the time of Edward II. The village is situated on the old and very beautiful coach road to Dover, midway between Gravesend and Rochester, the well-known Crown Inn being called the half-way house. From an eminence behind this house, the views of the country, for thirty miles round, are remarkably fine, which, together with its continuity to Gravesend, have made it a peculiarly pleasant and lively place of resort for summer visitors. About a mile distant is Gad's-hill, so humorously immortalised by Shakespeare as the scene of the exploits of Prince Henry, Poynts, and Falstaff, where they played their pranks and replenished their empty purses. On the top of this hill is the Sir John Falstaff Inn, where the petty sessions are held, and other county business is transacted. Thorne was an ancient demesne of the old English kings, and in the marsh a small battery was raised in 1796. — The living (St. Peter and St. Paul), a vicarage in the archd^y. and diocese of Rochester, is valued at £13. 1s. 8d.: pres. net income, £358: patron, Dean and Chapter of Rochester: pres. incumbent, J. J. Marsham, 1837: contains 3,010 acres: 139 houses: popⁿ. in 1841, 878: ass^d. prop^y. £3,860: poor rates in 1848, £380. 10s. — Court Lodge is the seat of Taffnell C. Barratt, Esq.

SHREWSBURY, SALOP, a borough and market town in the liberty of Shrewsbury, on the navigable river Severn: 157 miles from London (coach road 153), 31 from Stafford, 43 from Birmingham.—Nor. West. Rail. through Wolverhampton to Shrewsbury station: from Derby, through Stafford to Shrewsbury, 72 miles.—Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 6¼ a.m.: post closes 8.40 p.m.—This ancient town is built upon two eminences, which are formed into a kind of peninsula by the windings of the river Severn, and as the hills were anciently covered with shrubs and trees, the Britons gave it the name of Pengwernne and Anwethic, or Yellwythig, and the Saxons that of Scrobbes-byrig, which being written in Doomsday Book Scirspesberie, formed the derivation of its present appellation. At the time of the Heptarchy it was the capital of the district of Powysland, and the residence of the princes of Powys until 778, when Offa, king of Mercia, seized their possessions, and erected the barrier of Offa's Dyke. The Conqueror bestowed the town, with the greater part of the county, upon his kinsman, Roger de Montgomery, who was created Earl of Shrewsbury, Chichester, and Arundel, and erected a formidable castle here. In 1277 Edward I. fixed his residence here, with the courts of King's Bench and Exchequer. In 1283 the parliament was also assembled here, the king and the court being accommodated at Acton-Burnell, the seat of Bishop Burnell, the lord chancellor, the lords holding their sittings in the castle, and the commons, who now assembled for the first time, sitting in a barn in the town. Richard II., in 1397, assembled the parliament here, known as the Great Parliament, from the number of noblemen and others who attended. The forces of the Earl of Northumberland, who had rebelled against Henry IV., assisted by a large body of Scottish troops, fought a sanguinary battle near this place in 1403, with the king's army, in which the latter gained a complete victory; 2,300 knights and gentlemen, amongst them Hotspur, the son of Earl Percy, and 6,000 soldiers, were slain in the conflict, and were interred on the spot, since called Battlefield, where the king erected a chapel. During the wars of the Roses, the inhabitants of Shrewsbury zealously espoused the cause of the house of York; and it was here that Edward, Earl of March, afterwards Edward IV., raised the army with which he gained the signal victory of Mortimer's Cross.

The Earl of Richmond was proclaimed king in this town before the battle of Bosworth Field, and subsequently granted the inhabitants several privileges. Charles I. was warmly received here on the breaking out of the parliamentary war, the inhabitants even melting their plate to coin money for his use. Colonel Mytton, in 1644, after being twice repulsed, took the town by storm, and held it for the parliament till the end of the civil disturbances. In the reign of James II. the formidable castle was dismantled, a fort called Ronshill, erected by Cromwell, being the principal portion of it now remaining. The ruins of it stand on an eminence above the Severn, at the northern entrance to the town, and chiefly consist of the keep, the walls of the inner court, and a great arch of a gateway. There is here a grassy area, in which, according to immemorial usage, the knights of the shire are girt with their swords on their election to serve in parliament. Part of the ancient council-house, which was a temporary residence for some of the English monarchs, can still be seen. The town of Shrewsbury consists of several irregularly built and narrow streets, but it has lately been much improved, being well paved, lighted with gas, and supplied with water from the Severn, and also by means of conduits from a remarkably fine spring, called Bradwell, which has furnished the town with water since 1574. The river is crossed by two handsome stone bridges, one connecting the town with the suburb of Abbey-Foregate, and the other facilitating the communication with Wales. The neighbouring country abounds with the most picturesque and beautiful scenery, the richly cultivated plain extending thirty miles from north to south, twenty-eight from east to west, intersected by the Severn, and surrounded by the celebrated Wrekin and other ranges of lofty mountains and beautiful hills. The church of St. Alkmund was made collegiate by King Edgar; it was entirely rebuilt in 1795. St. Chad's church is a handsome circular Grecian structure, erected in 1792. The remains of a more ancient church are used as a charity school. The church of the Holy Cross, standing in the eastern suburb, and surrounded by the river Rea on the north and east, is part of the conventual church of a splendid abbey, founded by Roger de Montgomery in 1083, which, at the dissolution, had a revenue of £615. 4s. 3d. Dr. Bourchier, the last abbot, was nominated Bishop of Shrewsbury, but the town was not made the seat of the diocese, as the king had originally intended. This establishment occupied ten acres of ground, and that which still remains of it, which is used as the church, is grand and magnificent in the extreme. The roof is finely vaulted, the windows are of stained glass, and there are a number of ancient figures and monuments, one of which is supposed to be that of the founder, Earl Roger. Several of the other portions of the ruins are exquisitely and elaborately carved. The churches of St. Julian and St. Mary are handsome buildings. The military dépôt, near the Abbey-Foregate, is a large, handsome, and commodious brick building. There is a fine statue of Lieutenant-General Rowland, Lord Hill, at the entrance of the town. The old theatre was part of the palace of the princes of Powys, but a new and more commodious one has lately been erected. There are a public library, a mechanics' institute, and assembly-rooms. On the south-west of the town there is a beautiful and noble promenade, called the Quarry, extending over about twenty acres. The market-place is a commodious and ancient edifice. The trade of Shrewsbury was formerly of much greater importance than at present, but there is still a considerable traffic in Welsh cloths and flannel. There are also manufactories for thread goods, and some large iron-foundries. Brawn and a peculiar kind of cake are also made here. A considerable traffic in coal, grain, &c., is carried on by means of the river and the Shrewsbury canal. The town was first incorporated by William the Conqueror, and then by several successive sovereigns. The governing charter was that of Richard I., but under the Municipal Corporation Act, Shrewsbury is divided into five wards, governed by ten aldermen, and thirty common councillors. The borough has returned two members to parliament ever since the 23d of Edward I. The Reform Act extended the parliamentary limits of the borough, so as to include the whole town and its suburbs. Quarterly courts of session are held, and also petty sessions twice a week. The assizes and quarter sessions for the county are held here, and the town is a polling-place and place of election for the northern division of the county. There is a handsome town-hall, and a commodious gaol. The Baptists, Quakers, Independents, Wesleyan and Welsh Methodists, Sandemonians, Unitarians, and Roman Catholics, have places of worship here. In 1553, Edward VI. founded the royal free grammar-school, which has now an endowment of £2,740. The premises, which are spacious and commodious, comprise a valuable library and a fine museum. Sir Philip Sydney, Sir Fulke Greville (Lord Brooke), and various other eminent persons, were educated at this collegiate institution. About £393 per annum, the bequest of Mr. John Allat, is appropriated to the supply of clothing to the poor, and to the purposes of education, a fine freestone building being used for a school, in which twenty children of either sex are instructed. There is also a school endowed with about £50 a year, founded, in 1724, by Thomas Bowdler. St. Chad's almshouses, founded in 1409, for eleven persons; St. Mary's almshouses, founded in 1416, for sixteen persons; and St. Giles' almshouses, for four aged persons, have each a small endowment. There is a handsome and healthily situated house of industry, and a general infirmary. In 1734, James Millington bequeathed property, which now produces about £1,230 per annum, for the education of twenty-five children of each sex, natives of the suburb of Frankwell, and twelve resident and ten out-hospitalers, to be chosen from the decayed housekeepers of the suburb. A convent of Grey friars, another of Dominican friars, and numerous chapels anciently existed here. The principal natives of the place were—Ralph of Shrewsbury, Bishop of Bath and Wells; Robert, Bishop of Bangor; Thomas Bower and John Thomas, Bishops of Salisbury; Ed. Wooley, Bishop of Clonfert; Sneyd Davies; Lord Chief-Justice Jones; Richard Onslow, Speaker of the House of Commons; the Rev. Job Orton; Geo. Costard, the mathematician; Vice-Admiral Ben-

The mansion is a fine edifice in the French style of architecture. It was formerly the seat of the earls of Kent, from whom his lordship is descended. The park presents many and various beautiful and natural aspects, and is well timbered. The Earl de Grey derives his descent maternally from Anthony Grey, ninth Earl of Kent, who was grandfather of Anthony Grey, eleventh Earl of Kent, who married Mary, only daughter and heiress of Lord John Lucas, Baron of Shenfield, a dignity which became extinct in 1705. Her ladyship was elevated to the peerage in her own right in 1663, as Baroness Lucas of Crudwell, in the county of Wilts, with remainder to her issue, male and female, by the Earl of Kent. The only son by this marriage was Henry Grey, who inherited the honours both of his father and mother, and was in 1706 created Viscount Goderich of Goderich, in Herefordshire, Earl of Harrold in the county of Bedford, and Marquis of Kent. In 1710, his lordship was created Duke of Kent, and three years afterwards installed a knight of the Garter. His Grace, who had filled some of the most eminent situations in the state, had a numerous family, but they all died before him; and he procured a new patent in 1740, creating him Marquis Grey, with remainder to his grand-daughter, Lady Jemima, married to Philip, Viscount Royston. He died shortly afterwards, when all his honours died with him, except the marquissate of Grey, and the barony of Lucas. Her ladyship left two daughters, Amabel, who was her successor in the barony of Lucas, and Mary Jemima, who married Thomas, Lord Grantham. Lady Grantham left two sons, Thomas Philip, who succeeded his father as third Lord Grantham, and is the present Earl de Grey; and Frederick John, who was created Viscount Goderich and Earl of Ripon, and whose distinguished course we have already recorded. Paternally, the Earl de Grey is descended from Sir William Robinson, Knt., grandson of William Robinson, lord mayor of York in 1581 and 1594, twice M.P. for that city, and who served the office of high sheriff of the county in 1638. The son of that gentleman, Metcalfe Robinson, Esq., was created a baronet in 1660, and for many years represented the city of York in parliament. He died without issue, but the title was, in 1689, revived in favour of his nephew, the Sir William Robinson above spoken of. The son of Sir William, Sir Tancred, was a distinguished naval officer, and attained the rank of rear-admiral of the white. The son of that gallant officer, Thomas Robinson, began his career as secretary to the embassy of Horace Walpole, afterwards Lord Walpole, to the court of France, in 1723. From that time, till 1749, he was occupied in various diplomatic engagements in different parts of Europe. He subsequently filled several high offices in the state, and was, in 1761, raised to the peerage by the title of Baron Grantham of Grantham, in the county of Lincoln, and was subsequently appointed postmaster-general. His lordship died in 1770, when he was succeeded by his elder son Thomas, the second baron, who was also a distinguished diplomatist, and after representing his sovereign at several of the principal courts on the continent, was constituted, in 1779, first lord of trade; in 1782, was secretary for foreign affairs; and in 1783, concluded the preliminaries of peace with France. His lordship married Mary Jemima, daughter and co-heir of Philip, Earl of Hardwicke, by Jemima, Marchioness Grey, and sister and heir presumptive of Amabel, Countess de Grey, through whom the present peer inherited the title, and whose name and arms he assumed upon her death in 1833. His lordship is a K.G., F.A.S., and lord-lieutenant and custos rotulorum of the county of Bedford.

9 a.m.: post closes 5 p.m. — In 1724, John Richards, Esq., gave £1,200 for the support of the free school here; and in 1847, the present rector, Charles Tripp, D.D., gave a quarter of an acre of glebe land for the erection of a girls' school, to which himself and his parishioners liberally contributed. The other charities produce about £90 a year. — The living (the Virgin Mary), a rectory in the archd^y and diocese of Exeter, is valued at £51. 8s. 4d.: pres. net income, £589: patrons, Earl of Ilchester and Earl of Egremont: pres. incumbent, Charles Tripp, D.D., 1839: contains 4,545 acres: 257 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 1,384: probable popⁿ in 1849, 1,612: ass^d. prop^y £8,158. — Silvertown Park, a remarkably fine domain, was the seat of the late Earl of Egremont, who deduces his descent from Ailwardus, an eminent Saxon of the county of Norfolk, who, being possessed of an estate at Wymondham, afterwards called Wyndham, assumed the surname of Wyndham shortly after the Norman Conquest. From him was descended, through a long line of distinguished ancestry, Sir John Wyndham, who married Elizabeth, daughter and co-heir of John Lydenham, Esq. of Orchard, in the county of Somerset, through which the family acquired the property of Orchard-Wyndham, Lord Egremont's other country seat. One of that gentleman's descendants, William Wyndham, Esq., was created a baronet in 1661. The grandson of that gentleman filled some of the highest offices of the state in the reign of Queen Anne. Sir William, who died in 1740, had a high reputation for eloquence, and was esteemed a most polished gentleman. He was succeeded by his son, Sir Charles, who, on the death of his uncle, Algernon, Duke of Somerset, in 1750, without issue, also succeeded to the titles of Baron of Cokermonth and Earl of Egremont, his grace having obtained these dignities by patent in 1749, with remainder to his sister, Lady Catherine Wyndham. Of that nobleman the late earl was the great-grandson. — There are two other gentlemen's seats in the parish—one belonging to Colonel Glover, called Sivingshayes; the other at Heyne, being the property of the Rev. W. Scobell.

deliv^d 7 a.m. and 3 p.m.: post closes 11 a.m. and 9½ p.m. The town is of respectable appearance, and contains some good houses. Standing on the high old mail-coach road from London to Dover, its access by land has always been good; and by means of Milton Creek, which bounds it on the north, vessels of small burthen can sail hence direct for London. It contains two respectable inns; and George I. and George II. constantly rested at a highly respectable family house, since converted into shops, near the middle of the town, on their progress to and from their German dominions. Henry V. was entertained here by John Northwood, Esq., at the Red Lion, on his triumphant return from France; and, as Hasted says, though the repast was plentiful, and befitting the royalty of the guest, the whole expense did not amount to more than 9s. 9d., wine being then sold at twopence a quart, and other articles in proportion. The church, which is a spacious edifice, was rebuilt, all but the tower, in 1762, in consequence of the body of the building having been burnt down through accident. Most of the monuments were destroyed, or so removed as to become useless as memorials. The trade is chiefly in making bricks, of which thirty millions are sent away in busy times. In the 41st of Queen Elizabeth, a charter was granted, empowering the inhabitants to send two members to parliament, and vesting the government of the town in a mayor and jurats; but the privilege has long been abrogated, and the latter is in abeyance. There are two chapels here, one for Wesleyans, and one for Independents; and a large national school, of recent construction. Sittingbourne is one of the polling-places for the eastern division of the county. Rail. through Rugby, Derby, and Leeds, to Skipton station, thence 4 miles: from Derby, through Leeds, &c., 95 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 9 a.m.: post closes 4½ p.m. — The vale of Skipton is very fertile, and one of the richest grazing districts in England, and it is probably from the number of sheep fed here that its ancient name, Scriptone, was derived. The town principally consists of two long broad streets, one crossing the other almost at right angles. The houses are neat, and built of stone which is found in the vicinity. There is a good supply of water. Some extremely picturesque views may be seen from the heights in the neighbourhood. Most of the inhabitants are employed in the spinning and weaving of cotton, and there is an extensive porter and ale brewery in the neighbourhood. The government of the town is vested in a constable, appointed at the annual manorial court-leet; and at midsummer the general quarter sessions for the West Riding are held here. The church is a large and plain, but substantial and commodious building. The Independents, Methodists, and Quakers, have places of worship here. In 1548, the Rev. W. Ernystead founded the free grammar-school, and endowed it with lands which now produce about £500 per annum; it has about fifty-four scholars. The same gentleman endowed the clerks' school with £12 per annum. There is an endowed hospital at Beamsley, in this parish—(which see.) The Hon. Robert Boyle bequeathed property, now producing £103. 17s. 6d. a year, for educational purposes at Bolton Abbey. Lord Craven gave £70, and the Earl of Cumberland £13. 14s. per annum, to the poor of the town. The Skipton poor-law union comprises 47 parishes, extending over 197 square miles, with a population of about 28,500. Upon an eminence near the church stands the ancient castle, built in the time of William the Conqueror, by Robert de Romille. In the parliamentary war it was garrisoned for the king by Sir John Mallony, and in 1645, after a vigorous siege, taken by the parliamentarians, by whom it was rendered untenable as a fortress, although still occupied as a family mansion. It has since been repaired several times, and is now a handsome and commodious edifice; and after having changed owners several times, was one of the seats of the Earl of Thanet, from whom it came into the possession of its present owner. — Contains 26,760 acres: 1,603 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 6,870: probable popⁿ in 1849, 7,900: ass^d prop^r £25,979: poor rates in 1848, £1,373. 8s. — Market day, Saturday. SOUTHAMPTON, HANTS, a seaport, borough, market town, and county of itself, called the town and county of the town of Southampton, nearly in the centre of the southern half of Southamptonshire: 80 miles from London (coach road 75), 12 from Winchester, 21 from Portsmouth. Sou. West. Rail. to Southampton station: from Derby, through Rugby, Oxford, and Reading, to Southampton, 167 miles. Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 7 a.m., 3 and 6 p.m.: post closes 8½ a.m., 1½ and 10 p.m. The site of the town is the peninsula between the small estuaries of the rivers Itchen and Test, which, when united, form what is called the Southampton water, the ground rising gently from the water's edge until the houses are backed by the beautiful country beyond them. The place derives its origin from having been the Roman station of Claesentum, situated at Bittern, on the low headland of the Itchen, about a mile north-east of the present town; and many Roman coins, warlike implements, and other relics, have accordingly been found here. The ancient name of Southampton appears to have been, by Domesday Book and other ancient documents, Huntun or Huntune, in all probability from the river Anton, or Test as it is now called; but its present appellation was no doubt derived from its being a town situated on the south side of the hams, as the Saxons had it, or meadows, which stretched up from the water's edge. Southampton has many historical associations connected with it. It was repeatedly plundered by the Danes; Canute made it his residence. So important was it at the time of the Norman Conquest, that not less than ninety-six of the followers of William were provided with residences here, after the battle of Hastings. It subsequently became the scene of many historic incidents. Southampton is peculiarly a commercial port; but, although holding that character for centuries, has only risen to its present dignity during the last twenty years. Lately it has been made the entrepot of the Oriental and Peninsular, and the Royal Mail West Indian steamers, all of which start from Southampton water at such a depth as to insure their sailing. The business of the port has consequently increased to a very large extent; and if not at the present moment, certainly very shortly, Southampton will, after London, Liverpool, Leith, and Hull, be the fifth, if not the fourth, port in the kingdom. The town itself extends about a mile and a half from north to south, and about half a mile in mean breadth, surrounded by extensive and well-built suburbs. The houses are always respectable, most of them handsomely built, and such as would give dignity to any town. The chief street, so far as trading affairs go, is the High Street, which extends from the quay upon the water's edge for more than a mile through the ancient structure called the Bar Gate, at its nominal end into the country, being finished by very handsome rows of houses, or rather terraces, quite amongst the fields. The town is well supplied with spring water, which is collected from various sources in a reservoir, rather more than a mile from the town. The streets are all of them respectable, some of them remarkably handsome, and are all well paved and lighted with gas. St. Michael's church, situated on the east side of a cognominal square west of High Street, consists of a nave, chancel, and side aisles, and sends aloft from its centre a low tower, surmounted by a lofty and well-proportioned octagonal spire, which was erected about 90 or 95 years ago, as a landmark for vessels entering the port. The original structure is very ancient, and seems to have been Norman; but it has undergone so many and great changes and renovations, that the edifice, as it now stands, exhibits a curious intermixture of the Norman and Saxon, with the perpendicular and other pointed styles. Holyrood church, in the lower part of High Street, consists of a nave, chancel, and side aisles; is ancient, and, though much altered in the exterior, seems never to have been elegant. St. Lawrence church, a little farther up the High Street, is small, inelegant, and almost choked up by surrounding houses. All Saints' church, situated in the upper part of High Street, and erected since 1792, is a superb Grecian edifice, from designs by Mr. Revely. On the east end rises a noble structure, consisting of successively a square basement, a turret of six Corinthian columns supporting a circular entablature, an attic with three faces for the dial, and finally a dome. This, from its own elevation, and the height of the ground on which the whole edifice stands, is a feature of the town landscape as conspicuous as it is beautiful, and is seen, in all directions, at the distance of many miles. St. Mary's church, in the eastern suburb, was rebuilt early last century; and is remarkable only for being surrounded by a spacious cemetery, the chief one of the town. Portland chapel, founded in June, 1840, cost £1,850, and has about 650 sittings. The Bar Gate above spoken of is an ancient Gothic building, modernised in its interior, and contains the town-hall and all its appurtenances. To speak of the ancient boundaries is useless; but it may be observed that they appear to have run consentaneous, or nearly so, with the inside boundaries of the modern town. Among such an enlightened community as that of Southampton, there are, we might almost say of course, every appliance for intellectual and social enjoyment. A theatre, assembly rooms, reading and news rooms, and libraries, all minister to its inhabitants; while an air de gaieté throws its characteristic of a southern clime over the whole place. Much of the prosperity and well-being of Southampton is to be attributed to the existence of the railway from London, one of the best and earliest formed in the kingdom. The formation of this railway has led to a great increase in the dock accommodation of Southampton, rendered necessary by the large increase of the shipping interest. The new docks are immediately adjacent to the terminus of the railway. The total area originally allotted to the docks and their circumjacent accommodations is 208 acres; and of this 200 acres have been wrested from the dominion of the waters, or disposed within the natural line of high water-mark. The site was the property of the corporation of Southampton, and was purchased for £5,000. The chief dock, or rather basin, is exterior and tidal; it has 3,500 lineal feet of solid masonry quay-wall, and encloses a space of 16 acres; it has a depth of 18 feet at the lowest ebb spring-tide, and of 30 feet high water at springs, and 27 feet at neaps; it has gates of entrance 150 wide; is on all sides so landlocked as to enjoy complete shelter; and, in regard to both its proper character and its encincturing scenery, is unsurpassed for attraction by any dock in the kingdom. This dock had the tide first admitted into it on the 18th of June, 1842; and on Monday, the 29th of August, two of the Peninsular and Oriental steamers, viz., the Liverpool of 500 tons, and the Tagus of 780 tons, entered it. There is also a second or close dock, of 14 acres area, for the reception of merchant vessels. The docks are situated about seven miles from the Solent sea, or channel, between the Isle of Wight and the mainland. Among the peculiar advantages of the tidal dock for first-class steamers, may be enumerated the facility of steam-ships getting out of the general traffic, and entering the basin in quiet water,—the current of the ebb tide down the Itchen being such as to have a tendency to keep the deep water channel clear of mud and silt deposits,—the unexampled circumstance of high water at each tide continuing almost stationary here for about two hours,—freedom from ice in the Itchen,—facility of approach and departure in all seasons of the tide. The charitable bequests are numerous, but the first of which we have any record is the Domus Dei, or Maison Dieu, which was founded in the reign of Henry III., and given by Edward III. to Queen's College, Oxford. The county of the town comprises the five parishes of All Saints, Holyrood, St. John, St. Lawrence, and St. Michael, and most of the parish of St. Mary. All, except that of St. Mary, which is a peculiar of the Bishop of Winchester, are in the archdiocese and diocese of Winchester. All Saints is divided into All Saints Intra and All Saints Extra; and St. John's is ecclesiastically united to St. Lawrence. There are, in addition, the curacy or free chapel of St. Jesus, and the chapelry of the Holy Trinity. All Saints is a disch^d. rectory; rated at £8. 1s. 10½d.; gross income, £429; patron, the Crown.—Holyrood is a disch^d. vicarage; rated at £12. 1s. 10½d.; gross income, £396; patron, Queen's College, Oxford.—St. John's and St. Lawrence are disch^d. rectories; rated, the former at £6. 13s. 4d., and the latter at £7. 10s.; gross income, £152; patron, the Crown.—St. Mary's is a rectory; rated at £37. 5s. 5d.; gross income, no return; patron, the Bishop of Winchester.—St. Michael's is a disch^d. vicarage; rated at £2. 11s. 10d.; gross income, £153; patron, the Crown.—Jesus' Free Chapel is a perpetual curacy, not in charge; gross income, £70; patron in 1841, Rev. W. L. Davies.—Holy Trinity is a perpetual curacy; gross income, £140; in the patronage of Trustees.—St. Paul's is a perpetual curacy, in the patronage of the Rector of All Saints.—St. Mary Extra is also a perpetual curacy.—There are dissenting places of worship for an Independent church, formed in 1662; a Wesleyan Methodist, formed in 1790; a Baptist; a Roman Catholic; and a Society of Friends.—A convent of Grey friars was founded in 1240, and stood partly on the ground now within the area of Gloucester Square, and partly on what is now the site of an adjacent building. An ancient hospital for lepers was dedicated to Mary Magdalene, and, long previous to the Reformation, given to the priory of St. Dionysius. St. John's hospital, a more modern institution, for the instruction of six boys in the woollen manufacture, was given to the poor-house. The priory of St. Dionysius, a convent for Black canons, stood on the banks of the Itchen, two miles above the town; it was founded by Henry I., and endowed by Richard I. and other sovereigns; and, at the dissolution, it had nine inmates, and an estimated income of £91. 9s. A free grammar-school, founded by Dr. Capon, in the reign of Edward VI., has an endowment of £26. 5s. a year, but has lost its original character, and is simply a classical academy for boarders and day-scholars. A school for educating and apprenticing ten boys, and attended by about forty, was founded, in the latter half of last century, by Alderman Taunton. The borough is coextensive in limits, and now identical in administration, with the county of the town. From early times it was incorporated, but under the municipal act it is divided into five wards, governed by ten aldermen and thirty common councillors, under whom the whole town and county are directed. Southampton is the polling-place and the town for the election of a member for South Hampshire. — Contains 1,970 acres: 4,215 houses: pop^a in 1841, 27,744: ass^d. prop^r. £39,359: poor rates in 1838, £15,813. 19s. — Market days: Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. Fairs: May 7 and 8, and Trinity Monday and Tuesday. — Bankers: Maddison & Pearce—draw on Barnett, Hoares, & Co.; Atherley, Fall, & Atherley, jun.—draw on Lubbock & Co.; Hampshire Banking Co.—draw on Jones, Lloyd, & Co.; National Provincial Bank of England—draw on London Joint Stock Bank. — Hotels: Royal, Royal York, Crown, Railway, and Dolphin.

SOUTHBOROUGH, KENT, a chapelry in the parish of Tunbridge—(which see for access, &c.): 33 miles from London, 3 from Tunbridge, 14 from Maidstone. — Money orders issued at Tunbridge: London letters deliv^d. 8 a.m.: post closes 9 p.m. — The village is much frequented by visitors to Wells, and was formerly made the chief abode by those who came to drink the waters of that town. The residences of the gentry give it an air of great sociable cheerfulness. — The living is a perpetual curacy in the diocese of Canterbury: pres. net income, £153: patron, five Trustees: pres. incumbent, S. H. Langston, 1847. — (Popⁿ. with the parish.) — Great Bounds Park is the seat of the Rev. Sir Charles Hardinge, Bart., a brother of Lord Viscount Hardinge, the distinguished soldier and eminent governor-general of India. Sir Charles derives his descent from Nicholas Hardinge, Esq., who was living in the time of Henry VII., one of whose descendants, Nicholas Hardinge, Esq., was a barrister, and filled several state offices. One of the sons of that gentleman, Richard Hardinge, Esq., was created a baronet in 1801, and at his death the title devolved, according to the limitation in remainder, upon his nephew, its present holder.

SOUTHBURN, EAST RIDING, YORK, a township in the parish of Kirkburn—(which see for access, &c.): 193 miles from London, 4 from Great Driffield, 10 from Beverley. — Money orders issued at Driffield: London letters deliv^d. 11 a.m.: post closes 2 p.m. — Contains 1,030 acres: 20 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 97: ass^d. prop^r. £1,177: poor rates in 1848, £11. 2s.

Coast Rail. to Lewes, thence 4 miles: from Derby, through London, &c., 186 miles. — Money orders issued at Lewes: London letters deliv^d. 8 a.m.: post closes 7½ p.m. — The living, a rectory in the archd^y. of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, is valued at £16. 0s. 10d.: pres. net income, £210: patron, W. Allfree, Esq.: pres. incumbent, W. E. Allfree, 1843: contains 1,060 acres: 15 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 120: ass^d. prop^r. £870: poor rates in 1848, £95. 3s.

SOUTHEND, ESSEX, a hamlet in the parish of Prittlewell—(which see for access, &c.): 39 miles from London, 4 from Rochford, 7 from Rayleigh. — This place, situated at the mouth of the Thames, and surrounded by very pleasing scenery, first came into notice as a watering-place through a visit of the late Queen Caroline and the Princess Charlotte in 1804. It was at first both small and mean in appearance, but many handsome buildings have been erected: a new church has been raised; and there is a handsome hotel, several inns, two assembly-rooms, and a theatre. The views of the river and the shipping are always fine, but in clear weather peculiarly delightful. The resident gentry are, for the size of the place, numerous.

SOUTHERNBY-BOUND, CUMBERLAND, a township in the parish of Castle-Sowerby—(which see for access, postal arrangements, &c.): 294 miles from London, 11 from Penrith, 4 from Heskett-Newton. — Contains 26 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 136.—(Other returns with the parish.)

SOUTHERNDOWN, GLAMORGAN, a hamlet situated on the Bristol Channel, in the parish of St. Bride—(which see for access, &c.): 182 miles from London, 4 from Bridgend, 9 from Cowbridge. — Contains 61 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 313.—(Other returns with the parish.)

SOUTHERY, NORFOLK, a parish in the hun^d. of Clackclose, union of Downham: 94 miles from London (coach road 80), 6 from Downham, 13 from Ely. — Nor. and East. Co^r. Rail. through Ely to Downham-Market, thence 6 miles: from

Derby, through Syston, Peterborough, Ely, &c., 134 miles. — Money orders issued at Downham: London letters deliv^d 9 a.m.: post closes 7 p.m. — The Wesleyans and Particular Baptists have chapels here. — The living (the Virgin Mary), a rectory in the archd^y of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, is valued at £7. 10s.: pres. net income, £700: patron, George Hall, Esq.: pres. incumbent, Tanaley Hall, 1848: contains 3,950 acres: 147 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 1,023: ass^d prop^y £3,059: poor rates in 1848, £364. 17s.

Kent Rail. to Greenhithe, thence 1 mile: from Derby, through London, &c., 153 miles. — Money orders issued at Gravesend: London letters deliv^d 8 a.m.: post closes 8 p.m. — This is supposed to be the site of the Roman station Vagniacæ, and several earthen vessels, coins, tombs, and other relics have been found, as well as the walls of military and other buildings. There was anciently a fleet or inlet of shallow water flowing in here, and hence the name of the village, but that has been stopped up by an embankment. The church is very ancient and spacious, and contains many interesting monumental memorials. A free school was founded here by Sir John Sedley; and here are the celebrated water-gardens, from which the London dealers get most of their water-cresses. — The living, a rectory in the archd^y and diocese of Rochester, is valued at £51. 15s.: pres. net income, £523: patron, Bishop of Rochester: pres. incumbent, G. E. Murray, 1843: contains 2,340 acres: 110 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 667: ass^d prop^y £3,256: poor rates in 1848, £374. 6s.

SOUTHGATE, MIDDLESEX, a chapelry in the parish of Edmonton—(which see for access, &c.): 9 miles from London, 4 from Highgate, 4 from Chipping-Barnet. — This is one of the most pleasing of the country residences in the neighbourhood of London, and the village has consequently several very handsome houses abutting on the banks of the New River, at the southern extremity of Enfield Chase. The neighbouring district is well wooded, and there are several very pleasing diversified views. The Independents have a chapel in the village. — The living is a perpetual curacy in the diocese of Rochester: pres. net income, £180: patron, Vicar of Edmonton: pres. incumbent, Thomas Sale, 1830.

SOUTH-HAMLET, GLOUCESTER, a hamlet in the parish of Hampstead—(which see for access, &c.) — middle division of the hun^d of Dudstone and King's-Barton: 107 miles from London, 2 from Gloucester, 9 from Newent. — The Society of Friends have a school here. A mineral spring in the hamlet draws many people to the village. — Contains 160 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 1,055: ass^d prop^y £1,629.

SOUTHPORT, LANCASTER, a chapelry at the mouth of the Ribble, on the shore of the Irish Sea, in the parish of North Meols — (which see for access, &c.): 20 miles from Liverpool (with which it is connected by railway), and 9 miles from Ormskirk. — The town, which is exceedingly well built, and consists of thirteen streets, is much frequented during the summer season by visitors from all quarters, and possesses, moreover, a settled population of 4,766 inhabitants, according to the recent census of 1851. The uncommon salubrity of the climate, the fine smooth beach, the excellent baths and accommodation for sea-bathing, render the town particularly attractive to invalids and children. The main street (Lord Street) is perfectly straight, a mile in length, and of unusual width. The town is one of the few in England lighted with hydro-carbonic gas, which is found more brilliant and cheaper than coal gas. There are several charities in the town, all well supported. The schools for both young ladies and gentlemen are abundant and excellent. The Wesleyans, Independents, and Roman Catholics, have chapels here. — The living (Christ Church) is a perpetual curacy in the archd^y of Liverpool, and diocese of Chester: pres. net income, £150: patron, Rev. Charles Hesketh (as squire): pres. incumbent, B. S. Clarke, B.A., 1849 (as to surrogate for the parish). There is another church in the town (Trinity Church), in the gift of the rector and trustees: pres. incumbent, J. Jackson, M.A. — The villas of the various resident gentry form conspicuous objects, amongst the rest we may name Martindale Lodge, the seat of Samuel Lees, Esq., J.P.; Sea-View House, the residence of J. Hargreaves, Esq., J.P.; and the beautiful villas of Messrs. Greenough and Wrigley, also Justices of the Peace.

Tithes, with those of West Town, commuted in 1839.

SOUTHWARK, SURREY, a burgh, and extensive metropolitan district, situated in the eastern division of the hun^d of Brixton, union of Lambeth, on the south-eastern bank of the Thames: 1 mile from London, 10 from Croydon, 9 from Woolwich. — Southwark, in fact, forms part of London — (which see.) — Popⁿ in 1841, 98,648.

SOUTHWELL, NOTTINGHAM, a parish and market town in the liberty of Southwell and Scrooby: 143 miles from London (coach road 132), 7 from Newark, 14 from Nottingham. — Nor. West. Rail. through Rugby and Nottingham to Southwell station: from Derby, through Nottingham, &c., 42 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 8½ a.m.: post closes 5½ p.m. — This is a place of great antiquity, and situated in the midst of a district well known, not only for its Druidical, but also for its Saxon associations. Formerly, it was much more extensive than it is at present; but still it is one of those quiet, respectable-looking country towns that the rural tourist loves to behold, while its cottages, detached residences, gardens, and meadows, give a most pleasing idea of tranquil life. But although quiet, certainly not humble; for there are many gentlemanly residences, several respectable inns, and a fine district around. Southwell owes its chief distinction to its minster and its school. The minster is a noble building. It is cruciform in structure, and the antiquarians would fain inform us that it is of Saxon architecture: but that is evidently a mistake; for all its portions bear the character of Norman conception, or rather of the early English style. Unquestionably, however, it is one of the oldest of the cathedral structures in England; and has been parochial from the earliest date — one proof, perhaps, of its antiquity, for all our parochial arrangements came out of the Wittenagomote. The edifice consists of a nave with two aisles, a transept at the west end, a choir with aisles, chapter-house, and a tower. The entire length of the cathedral is 306 feet, and of the transept 121 feet. At the west end are two towers, which in their build are chiefly of Norman construction, but which were, in the first place, of Saxon origin. The Norman portions of the structure, which are evidently built of the Bolsover stone, used in the construction of the Houses of Parliament, are still throughout in a perfect state, the mouldings and carvings being as perfect and sharp as when they were first executed; and all the enrichments seem to be made of stone which resists entirely all the effects of our atmosphere. The chapter-house is very beautiful; and in the church-yard there are the remains of the college which was established for the chantry priests. The establishment of the minster now consists of sixteen prebendaries, six vicars-choral, an organist, and the other necessary officers. This was, in ancient days, always considered to be the mother church of Nottinghamshire; and, to a certain extent, with the exception of St. Mary's at Newark, may be said to be so still. The grammar-school is supported by endowment, and two scholarships at St. John's College, Cambridge, are appropriated to the choristers of Southwell. The other charities produce about £150 per annum, part of which is appropriated to educational purposes. The county house of correction—unpleasant thought—is situated here. The environs of Southwell, which is one of the polling-places for the county, are very agreeable. —The living, a rectory in the archd^y of Nottingham, and diocese of Lincoln, is valued at £7. 13s. 4d.: pres. net income, £450: patron, Prebendary of Normanton: pres. incumbent, J. M. Wilkins, 1841: contains 4,550 acres: 643 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 3,487: ass^d. prop^y. £10,462. —Market day, Saturday. Fair, Whit-Monday, for cattle and horses. —Bankers: Wyld & Co.—draw on Lubbock & Co. —Saracen's Head Inn, and Crown Hotel.

C. Young, 1844: contains 1,470 acres: 91 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 957: ass^d. prop^y. £1,289: poor rates in 1848, £116. 14s. —Fair, May 19, for pedlery.

SOUTHWICK, WILTS, a chapelry in the parish of North Bradley—(which see for access, &c.): 102 miles from London, 3 from Trowbridge, 5 from Frome. —Money orders issued at Trowbridge: London letters deliv^d. 8 a.m.: post closes 7½ p.m. —The Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists have places of worship here. —The living (Christ Church) is a perpetual curacy in the archd^y and diocese of Sarum: pres. net income, £159: patron, Vicar of North Bradley: pres. incumbent, E. Peacock, 1850: contains 272 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 1,384: ass^d. prop^y. £3,399: poor rates in 1848, £706. 5s.

SOUTHWOLD, SUFFOLK, a parish, borough, seaport, and market town, in the hun^d. and union of Blything: 98 miles from London (coach road 105), 4 from Wangford, 8 from Halesworth. —East. Coⁿ. Rail. to Ipswich, thence 30 miles: from Derby, through London, &c., 230 miles. —Money orders issued at Wangford: London letters deliv^d. 8 a.m.: post closes 6½ p.m. —The parish is nearly an island, being almost entirely surrounded by water—the river Blythe, the Buss Creek, over which there is a bridge, and the German Ocean, being its boundaries. The Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists have places of worship here. The town is pleasantly situated on a hill, overlooking the German Ocean, consisting principally of one long street, which begins near the bridge, and ends at the cliff, or rather the edge of the cliff, though not quite upon it. Every house has its own grounds, and generally a pleasing piece of garden-ground attached. The church, which is a very fine edifice, was erected about the year 1460, and has a nave. Besides it, the principal buildings are the guildhall and the market-place. Southwold is excellently supplied with water from springs, and the herring and sprat fisheries give employment to many of the inhabitants, but a considerable trade is carried on in the importation of coal and other material for the interior. The port is subject to that of Yarmouth; and the harbour, which is under the control of local commissioners, has, during these last few years, been repaired and much improved. Southwold has risen to its present state of prosperity, from the decline of the old town of Dunwich. In 1659 it was visited by a dreadful fire, which consumed nearly the whole of the town, and, with other public matters, the courts' roll, in consequence of which the whole body of copyholders became freeholders under the corporation. Formerly there was an ancient fort here, which is supposed to have been thrown up by the Danes in 1010, some parts of which are still visible on the height called Eycliffe. The government have taken advantage of this position, and have erected two batteries, each of which mounts six 18-pounder guns. Under the Municipal Act, Southwold is governed by four aldermen and twelve common councillors. The harbour, which is under excellent control, is well governed by the commissioners. Fossil remains have frequently been discovered in the neighbourhood; and Southwold Bay, or Sole Bay, as it is generally called, is celebrated as being the scene of a naval engagement between the Dutch and the British in 1672, when the Duke of York, afterwards James II., was in command of the latter. During the fight, the Dutch fleet was tremendously shattered, and their admiral withdrew his vessels, which, in the morning, the British were unable to pursue. The living (St. Edmund) is a perpetual curacy in the archd^y of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich: pres. net income, £60: patron, Earl of Stradbroke: pres. incumbent, H. W. R. Birch, 1829: contains 621 acres: 477 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 2,186: ass^d. prop^r. £6,593: poor rates in 1848, £550. 12s. Market day, Thursday. Fairs: Trinity Monday, and September 4. Money orders issued at Thirsk: London letters deliv^d. 8½ a.m.: post closes 4½ p.m. The village, which is extremely pleasing in appearance, consists of one wide and very long street, many of the houses being of a very superior class. The living, a perpetual curacy in the archd^y of Cleveland, and diocese of York, is valued at £14: pres. net income, £310: patron, Archbishop of York: pres. incumbent, Sam. Coates, 1843: contains 2,420 acres: 174 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 957: ass^d. prop^r. £4,471: poor rates in 1848, £280. 12s.

SOWERBY, WEST RIDING, YORK, a chapelry in the parish of Halifax—(which see for access, &c.): 198 miles from London, 4 from Halifax, 12 from Rochdale. Money orders issued at Halifax: London letters deliv^d. 9 a.m.: post closes 4½ p.m. The present chapelry of Sowerby is not co-extensive with the township. There are within the township five churches, viz., Sowerby church, of which the Rev. E. Brooke is the incumbent; popⁿ in 1851, 3,631; St. George's, popⁿ 1,607; St. Mary's, popⁿ 981; St. Michael's, popⁿ 809; St. John's in the Wilderness, popⁿ 877. Each of the four last-named churches has part of its ecclesiastical district in other townships. The charities produce about £130 per annum. The Independents and the Wesleyan Methodists have chapels in the village. The living, a perpetual curacy in the diocese of Ripon, is valued at £12. 2s. 8d.: pres. net income, £160: patron, Vicar of Halifax: pres. incumbent, R. E. Brooke, 1849: contains 3,670 acres: 1,700 houses: popⁿ in 1851, 7,905: ass^d. prop^r. £6,763: poor rates in 1848, £983. 5s. The gentlemen's residences are—Field-House, the seat of Robert Stansfield, Esq.; Mile-House, of W. H. Rawson, Esq.; Haugh-End, of C. K. Clarke, Esq.; Brockwill, of John Rawson, Esq.; Breck, of W. H. Rawson, jun., Esq.; Thorpe, of

John Priestley, Esq.; and Dean-House, John Hadwen, Esq.

SOWERBY-BRIDGE, WEST RIDING, YORK, a chapelry and village in the parish of Halifax, on the banks of the Calder: 194 miles from London, 3 from Halifax, 5 from Huddersfield. (For access and postal arrangements, see above.) The population is an active one, and there is a flourishing Mechanics' Institution in the district. The Wesleyan Methodists and the Independents both have chapels here. The charities produce about £130 per annum. The living, a perpetual curacy in the diocese of Ripon, is valued at £6: pres. net income, £230: patron, Vicar of Halifax: pres. incumbent, C. Rogers, 1829.

SOWERBY-CASTLE, CUMBERLAND, a parish in Leath ward, union of Penrith: the parish comprises the townships of Bustabeck, How-bound, Row-bound, Southernby-bound, and Stockleworth-bound: 294 miles from London (coach road 293), 16 from Carlisle, 12 from Penrith. Nor. West. Rail. through Crewe and Lancaster to Penrith, thence 12 miles: from Derby, through Crewe, &c., 194 miles. Money orders issued at Carlisle: London letters deliv^d. 2 p.m.: post closes 11½ a.m. One of the schools here is endowed with £10 a year. A singular custom prevails in this parish, for the copyhold lands do not descend to males, but especially to females, as coparceners; neither can the wife of a copyholder be divested of the right of dower, without her own consent. The ten principal estates in this parish are called Red Spears, from the circumstance that the titles of their owners rested upon the fact of their riding through the town of Penrith every Whit-Tuesday, brandishing their spears. The living (St. Kentigern), a perpetual curacy in the archd^y and diocese of Carlisle, is valued at £17. 10s. 5d.: pres. net income, £90: patron, Dean and Chapter of Carlisle: pres. incumbent, Joseph Taylor, 1844: contains 7,940 acres: 171 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 1,007: ass^d. prop^y. £7,254: poor rates in 1848, £353. 9s.

SOYLAND, WEST RIDING, YORK, a township in the parish of Halifax (which see for access, &c.): 198 miles from London, 6 from Halifax, 9 from Huddersfield. Money orders issued at Halifax: London letters deliv^d. 9½ a.m.: post closes 4 p.m. The whole of the neighbourhood is occupied with the cotton and woollen manufacture. Contains 4,960 acres: 641 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 3,603: ass^d. prop^y. £4,757: poor rates in 1848, £434. 5s.

SPALDING, LINCOLN, a parish and market town in the wapentake of Elloe, union of Spalding, parts of Holland: 94 miles from London (coach road 103), 16 from Boston, 20 from Peterborough. Gt. Nor. Rail. through Peterborough to Spalding station: from Derby, through Nottingham and Boston to Spalding, &c., 81 miles. Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 7 a.m. and 7 p.m.: post closes 9 p.m. This town, which is of great antiquity, is situated on the river Welland, by which it is nearly surrounded. It is highly respectable in appearance, the streets are well drained and clean, and the houses neatly built. The market-place is spacious, and on one side there is a substantial brick-built town-hall, in the upper part of which the several courts are held, the lower part of the structure being occupied as shops. The quarter sessions for the parts of Holland are held here regularly, and petty sessions for the wapentake of Elloe once a week. A neat theatre has been erected near the market-place. The church, which is a beautiful structure, has long been celebrated for its very handsome spire. A priory for Benedictine monks was founded here in 1052, and vestiges of the monastic buildings still remain. The free grammar-school was founded in the reign of Elizabeth, and endowed in 1588 by John Blanche and John Gamlyn, Esqrs., with freehold and copyhold lands. The petit school was founded and endowed in 1682, by Thomas Willesby, Esq., with freehold lands, which are now vested in trustees for the general benefit of the town. Sixty scholars are educated upon the foundation, and gratuitously furnished with all school requisites; beside which, when the funds admit of it, deserving boys are clothed on leaving the school. The Blue-coat school for children of both sexes, is also partly supported by endowments left by the Gamlyn family. Almshouses for 22 poor persons were founded in 1490, and others for eight poor widows in 1709. The house of correction for Holland stands in an open space in the town, having its principal front to the market-place. Spalding is a member of the port of Boston; and since the Welland has been made navigable, has carried on a considerable—what may be called export—trade by barges, of from 40 to 60 tons, which come up to the centre of the town; but its principal subsistence is derived from the rich agricultural district by which it is surrounded. Spalding is one of the polling-places for the parts of Kesteven and Holland. The living (St. Mary and St. Nicholas), a perpetual curacy in the archd^y and diocese of Lincoln, is valued at £70: pres. net income, £950: patrons, certain Trustees: pres. incumbent, W. Moore, 1825: contains 12,070 acres: 1,295 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 7,778: probable popⁿ in 1849, 8,944: ass^d prop^r £17,079: poor rates in 1848, £2,763. 12s. Tithes commuted in 1801. STAFFORD, a borough and market town in the southern division of the hund^d of Pirehill, union of Stafford, nearly in the centre of Staffordshire, of which it is the capital: 132 miles from London (coach road 141), 17 from Lichfield, 27 from Birmingham. — Nor. West. Rail. to Stafford station: from Derby, through Birmingham to Stafford, &c., 61 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7 a.m. and 3 p.m.: post closes 7½ a.m. and 10½ p.m. — Stafford, which is a place of ancient date, and was at one time the hermitage of a Roman Catholic anchorite, called St. Betheni, is supposed to have derived its name from its situation on the river Sow, over which there is here a ford which may be passed by a man leaning on his staff. The town, however, as a town, appears to have been built by Ethelfleda, the widow of Ethelred, Earl of Mercia, was fortified by her to repel the incursions of the Danes, and afterwards became the capital of the Mercian kingdom. It evidently continued to be a place of much consequence, for a royal mint was established here, and several coins were struck during the reigns of Edward the Confessor and William the Conqueror. In Doomsday Book the place is named as a city, and the account states that the king had eighteen burgesses in demesne, and the Earls of Mercia twenty mansions; that it was governed by two bailiffs, and that William the Conqueror built the castle, and committed it to the custody of Robert de Todeni, son of the standard-bearer of Normandy, ancestor of the ducal house of Rutland, and many of the Lords de Clifford. The barony of Clifford was so extensive — (of the house of Rutland we have spoken elsewhere, under the article BELVOIR) — that it included sixty knights'-fees, and claimed suit and service of eighty-nine villages. Eight of the barons were, including the founder, barons by tenure; the ninth was made a baron by writ in the reign of Edward I. After remaining for many generations in abeyance, a not at all uncommon thing in those days, an ancient attainder was abolished, and Sir George Jerningham, the then representative of the family, became Baron Stafford, in which he has since been succeeded by his son. The Duke of Sutherland, who enjoys the title of Marquis of Stafford, derives it from the county, and not from the town. Stafford, though placed low, is in an agreeable situation, and both in the town and suburbs there are many highly respectable and comfortable residences. The appearance of the place, therefore, is altogether agreeable. It consists principally of one street, from which others diverge and ramify on either side and in various ways, several squares being interposed among the leading thoroughfares, which have all their attendant allies and courts. On the south side of the river there is a particularly handsome suburb, called Forebridge, situated in the eastern division of Cuttleston hundred, which communicates with the town by a stone bridge of very pleasing appearance. To this bridge the principal street of the town comes down from its very northern extremity, bearing in its course, and according to its position, the several appellations of Far and Near Foregate, Gaolgate, and Greengate, presenting many a picturesque specimen of the antique structures which, with their timber and plaster projecting stories, show what English life was in ancient days. The site of an old wall, which at one time environed the town, is indicated by a narrow lane, bounded by mean buildings. The principal streets are well paved and lighted with gas. Springs rise everywhere to within a very few feet of the surface of the ground, so that the inhabitants are well supplied with water. The public buildings are numerous, and some of them imposing; as, for instance, the shire-hall, built in the market-square in 1798, at a cost of upwards of £5,000, presenting a front of 120 feet in length, with handsome Doric pilasters, supporting a pediment with a figure of justice in the tympanum; the judges' house in the south, and the mayor's office in the rear. The county jail, and the house of correction, situated to the north-east of the town, are sternly imposing structures, contrived, of course, for their several purposes. The Staffordshire General Lunatic Asylum, finished in 1818, at a cost of nearly £34,000, is a neat and lofty brick edifice, 368 feet in length, and has gardens and pleasure grounds of upwards of 30 acres in extent, enclosed by a strong stone wall. The General Infirmary, built partly in 1766, and partly at two subsequent dates, is a pleasing structure of brick, with two wings, and a portico over its principal entrance. On the site of the old castle, a new structure has been raised, but it was never finished, and it is now only of importance as forming a beautiful feature in the landscape. The church of St. Mary's is a venerable cruciform structure, consisting of a nave, two side aisles, and a transept, with a three-aisled chancel, the style of architecture being of different dates, from the time of before Henry VI., and the interior being, from its arrangement, full of interest. Originally collegiate, St. Mary's was given by King Stephen to the bishop and chapter of Lichfield and Coventry, and, at the dissolution, had a dean and thirteen prebendaries, whose annual revenues were valued, respectively, at £55. 13s. 10d. and £38. The living is now a disch^d rectory in the archd^y of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield; gross income, £221; patron, the Lord Chancellor. St. Chad's, which is united with St. Mary's for the support of the poor, and comprehends less than forty houses, is a perpetual curacy; gross income, £85; patron, prebendary in Lichfield Cathedral. The perpetual curacies of St. Mary's, Christ-church, Marston, and Whitgreave, are in the patronage of the rector. A monastery of Grey friars in the town, was, at its dissolution, valued at £35. 10s. 10d. a year. A priory of Black canons, founded in the twelfth century, stood two miles east of the town, was dedicated to Thomas à Becket, and had an annual revenue of £198. There were also in the town an hospital, and a Sytell or free chapel, dedicated respectively to St. John and St. Leonard. The suburbs on the right bank of the Sow belong to Castle-Church—(which see.) The dissenting places of worship are an Independent, built in 1811, to supersede a former chapel; a Wesleyan Methodist, in 1811; a New Connexion Methodist, in 1810; a Friends', in 1730; a Presbyterian, and a Roman Catholic. A free grammar-school was founded and endowed, in 1550, by Edward VI.; and it has an annual income, from its endowments, of £335, and is conducted by a master and an usher. There are two national schools, six other daily schools, and five infant schools. Sir Martin Noel's almshouses, built before 1693, form three sides of a square, and have accommodations for twenty-three poor persons. Four of the almshouses receive no money from the charity fund; the others aggregately receive 15s. 6d. a week, and the whole have annually £6. 10s. worth of coals. Two other suites of almshouses, of respectively four and two tenements, appear to have no endowment. The sum of £21. 6s. 4d., from a burgess fund, consisting of South Sea annuities, is annually distributed among ten poor burgesses. Eleven or twelve benefactions, chiefly of small amount, are applied to the benefit of the poor. The Stafford poor-law union comprises twenty parishes, with a population of about 18,000 persons, spread over an area of 78 square miles.—Contains 2,510 acres: 1,216 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 10,370: ass^d prop^r £5,780: poor rates in 1848, £1,150. 12s.—Market day, Saturday. Fairs: Tuesday before Shrove-Tuesday, and May 14, for cattle; Saturday before St. Peter's day, June 29, and July 10, for wool; September 16, and December 4, for horses and cattle.—Bankers: Stevenson, Salt, & Co. (Old Bank)—draw on Stevenson, Salt, and Son; Branch of Manchester and Liverpool District Banking Co.—draw on Smith, Payne, and Smith.—Grand Junction, Vine, and Star Inns; Swan Hotel.

Floyer, Esq.: pres. incumbent, R. S. Smith: contains 994 acres: 33 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 212: ass^d prop^r £2,199.

—In this parish is the seat of John Floyer, Esq., who has sat for some time in the House of Commons, and who derives his descent from Floierus, who settled on lands in Devonshire, beyond the river Exe, and which were called after his name. Grants of these lands were renewed in the time of Henry I. and in subsequent reigns. During the long course of centuries which has elapsed since that time, the family have always held an eminently distinguished position in the country. Mr. Floyer, who filled the office of high sheriff in 1844, is a magistrate and deputy-lieutenant of the county.

STAGSDEN, BEDFORD, a parish in the hun^d of Willey, union of Bedford: 59 miles from London (coach road 54), 5 from Bedford, 7 from Olney.—Nor. West. STAINDROP, DURHAM, a parish in the south-west division of Darlington ward, union of Teesdale: the parish comprises the townships of Hilton, Langley-Dale and Shotten, Raby and Keverstone, Staindrop, Wackerfield, Woodland, and part of Cleatham: 266 miles from London (coach road 248), 6 from Barnard-Castle, 9 from Bishop-Auckland. — Gt. Nor. Rail. through Peterborough, Lincoln, and York, to Darlington, thence 11 miles: from Derby, through York, &c., 144 miles. — Money orders issued at Barnard-Castle: London letters deliv^d 12½ p.m.: post closes 12½ p.m. — The town, which is very ancient, consists principally of one street, which, as in most cases, is wide, and, in this, well built also. There was formerly here a collegiate establishment, founded in the reign of Henry IV. by Ralph Neville, Earl of Westmoreland, in honour of the Virgin Mary, which, in addition to its priests and clerks, had also an hospital for decayed gentlemen. At the dissolution, its revenues amounted to £170. 4s. per annum. Raby Castle, which stands about a mile north of the town, was once the baronial residence of the Nevilles, and still continues in such a state as to render it one of the finest remains of the feudal ages in the kingdom. The town possesses a good subscription library and a news-room; and extensive works for smelting lead ore are carried on in Langdale Vale, which is close by. Courts-leet and baron are held annually by the lord of the manor, when constables for the government of the place are selected. — The living is a vicarage, annexed to the rectory of Cockfield: contains 14,990 acres: 431 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 2,436: do. in 1851, 2,801: ass^d prop^y £10,167.

STAINES, MIDDLESEX, a parish and market town in the hun^d of Spelthorne, union of Staines: 16½ miles from London (coach road 17), 6 from Windsor, 10 from Kingston. — Sou. West. Rail. to Staines station: from Derby, through London, &c., 147 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7.10 a.m. and 1.40 p.m.: post closes 10 a.m. and 7½ p.m. — Camden seems to have supposed that the name of this place, which is curious, was derived from a stone with the date of 1285, erected on a pedestal on the banks of the Thames, which marks the bounds of the jurisdiction of the corporation of London over the river to the west. The town, which is chiefly formed of houses built on either side of the highway, has other but much smaller thoroughfares diverging from each side. Of late years the place has been much improved, and in 1836 a small but neat building was erected for a library and scientific institution. A national school-room for girls, and a teacher's residence, an ornament to the town, is just completed. A new and handsome bridge was also erected here over the Thames, at the expense of about £41,000. About £23 are procured from the parochial charities for public purposes. The Baptists, Independents, Methodists, and Society of Friends, have places of worship here. Staines is a lordship of the Crown, and is governed by two constables and four headboroughs.
